JOSEPH B. McCULLAGH.

Editor of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, is Dead.

He Leaped From a Window in His Home During the Night and was Found Dead at Dawn Presumably a Suicide.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 31.—Joseph B. McCullagh, editor of the Globe-Democrat, attired only in his night clothes, leaped from the window of his bedroom some time between midnight and daybreak and dashed his brains out on the stone flagging of the yard.

At 6:30 a. m. one of the stable boys employed by Mrs. Kate Manion, of 3837 West Pine boulevard, with whom Mr. McCullagh resided, found the body cold in death. The skull was battered in and the brains were scattered about on the flagging.

"Mr. McCullagh gave no premonition of suicidal tendency during his illness of the past few months. Dr. C. H. Hughes, his physician, saw him for a little while Wednesday evening. McCullagh said he felt sleepy and gave the doctor to understand he wanted to be left alone.

"During the night Mr. McCullagh drank a little more than an ounce of the drug—a dose that was quite sufficient to have caused death. But his stomach was too weak to retain it. The medicine caused violent purging and vomiting, and most of it was ejected from his system. Part of it was absorbed, however, and the action of his heart was considerably weakened.

"The next morning, the day before Christmas, I called again," said Dr. Hughes, "and was greatly surprised and alarmed when I discovered that so much of the drug was gone. I asked him if he had taken it and he said he had. He admitted that he knew the deadly character of the drug, but did not seem to be at all concerned about the matter.

I gave him medicine calculated to restore him to the condition of the day before, and the matter was not discussed afterward.

"I am satisfied that Mr. McCullagh could not have taken the medicine by mistake. There was no other bottle in the room at all resembling the one containing the digitalis, and there was no other medicine at hand that would have produced a fatal result.

"I at once connected the circumstance with a conversation we had only a few weeks ago, in which he mentioned Abraham Lincoln.

"Mr. McCullagh maintained that, in the light of history, the assassination of Lincoln is a fortunate thing for his fame. 'It is a good thing,' he said, 'for a man to die at the right time.' As a general proposition he maintained that when a man outlived his period of usefulness, it was time for him to die.

"Still he did not seem to apply this theory to himself, for he would never admit that he was not a well man."

"There was no pathological condition of his organs that would have resulted in death at an early date. Bright's disease was not established, and there were no indications of softening of the brain. His principal trouble was a cerebral strain, due to overwork, which might have been cured had he been content to follow instructions.

"I had known Mr. McCullagh for 30 years. I had been his physician since October, 1894, and knew his physical condition intimately.

"Considering all the circumstances surrounding his life and death, my impression is—and it can only be an impression, since nobody witnessed the deed—that he committed suicide."

Coroner Wait interposed a theory, and asked Dr. Hughes if he thought a man of Mr. McCullagh's intelligence would resort to such means of self-destruction.

"It is not a question of intelligence," said Dr. Hughes. "It is a question of mood, of impulse. Men of the highest intelligence resort to self-destruction when they are sick. The slightest annoyance may cause men to do things that are not insane, but rash and impulsive, when in bad health, that would otherwise pass unnoticed."

WORK OF A FIEND.

De Plans and Attempts the Murder of an Entire Family, and Succeeds in Killing Three—Infatuation for an 11-Year-Old Girl the Motive for the Bloody Deed—The Fell Work Arrested by a Woman.

ATLANTA, Ga., Jan. 2.—Edward C. Flanagan, an employee of the Standard Oil Co., attempted to exterminate the Allen family at Poplar Springs, DeKalb county, Thursday night, and did kill three members. His victims were Dixon E. Allen and wife, an old couple, both more than 70 years old, and Miss Ruth Slack. Flanagan seems to have been in love with Leila Allen, the 11-year-old granddaughter of Dixon Allen. The old couple's married son, G. W. Allen, and his wife and two children lived with them in a neat little cottage four miles from the city limits. Flanagan had been boarding with them for six months. His actions Thursday were not quite natural, but he did not cause any alarm. It was noticed, though, that he was anxious to get the members of the family to leave the house. Late in the afternoon he returned and when supper was announced he ate with the family. When he had finished, he asked Mrs. C. W. Allen to give him a drink of water. She left the room to get it. Her husband was standing by the table talking to his father. Flanagan went to his own room, and rummaging in a moment, thrust a pistol through a portiere close to the man's head and fired. Allen dodged, and the ball struck him in the back of the head. Flanagan stepped over the body and knocked the lamp from the table with a wave of his pistol. Old Mrs. Allen, Miss Slack, who was a sister of the younger Mrs. Allen, and the children ran into the room in terror. Flanagan clubbed the elder Allen with his pistol and killed him with a few blows. Then he strode quickly to the room where the women were screaming and began firing on them. Old Mrs. Allen was shot through the body twice and killed. Miss Slack was shot through the back of the neck and fatally wounded.

At this moment the daughter-in-law, who had gone for the water, returned and rushed into the room where she heard the firing. She found that Flanagan was trying to kill Leila, her daughter. She struck the pistol and then clinched with the murderer. He struggled and she held him until he had dragged her out doors. Flanagan fought like a madman, and tried his best to shoot her. She succeeded in preventing him from firing for a minute or more. By this time her husband had recovered consciousness and ran out to his wife's rescue. Help soon came. Flanagan was bound with ropes and held until Sheriff Austin of DeKalb county arrived. A large crowd assembled and talked freely of lynching Flanagan. The sheriff did not wait to give them an opportunity but immediately hurried the prisoner off and brought him into the city, where he was placed in the jail. Miss Slack died about midnight. She was from Birmingham.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

From a Plunge Into Cahokia Creek by a Crowded Train.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 2.—Twenty-five passengers aboard of Illinois Central mail train No. 224, due in St. Louis at 11 a. m. yesterday, narrowly escaped being dumped into Cahokia Creek, in East St. Louis, at 11:15 o'clock Friday morning.

The train, in charge of Conductor Blaney, pulled into the Relay on time, and bridge engine No. 26, with Pilot Woodell in charge, was coupled on, and the "high ball" signal, which means to pull out, was given.

While the train was ascending the eastern approach to the bridge there was a heavy crash and jar as the cracking of heavy timbers. The train seemed bounding along on the ties, just as the engine had passed over the Cahokia creek.

Twenty-five ladies in the forward car joined in a chorus of shrieks. A score of heads popped out of the windows to discern the cause of the confusion.

It developed that the rear car had jumped the track right at the switch tower, where there is a network of tracks, and had forced the smoking car from its bearings.

The engineer reversed his engine in time to save the entire train from plunging into the muddy waters of Cahokia, 15 feet below the trestle.

The train was brought to a standstill on the trestlework. The rear trucks of the smoker were off the track, and the east end of the car was twisted and damaged considerably. The baggage and mail car had been thrown on its side directly across the main track.

The accident happened just as Baggageman Smith and Postal Clerk Deament were making their toilets preparatory to leaving their posts at Union station. They tumbled over each other when the car fell on its side, and both received slight bruises.

The engine and passenger coach were cut loose from the wreck and pulled into Union station about fifteen minutes later. The damage to the baggage and mail car and smoker will not exceed $1,000.

The accident was caused by a broken flange on a wheel of the forward trucks of the mail car.

It required several hours to remove the wreck.

Result of the Investigation of the Loss of the Steamer San Benito.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 31.—The United States inspectors of hulls and boilers have concluded their investigation into the loss of the steamer San Benito near Point Reis, November 1, and as a result have revoked the licenses of Capt. VOLUME AND VALUE

Of Minerals and Metals Produced During the Past Year Compared With That Preceding It, as Computed by the Engineering and Mining Journal—A Slight Decrease in Value Does Not Indicate Any Falling Off in Quantity.

NEW YORK, Jan. 2.—The Engineering and Mining Journal to-day says:

The production of minerals and metals in the United States for the year 1896 is given at a total value of $653,311,468, showing a decrease as compared with 1895 of $24,689,266, or about 3 1/2 per cent. This decrease was largely in values rather than in quantities; in none of the chief articles was there any marked decrease, while in several there were considerable increases.

The total production of metals in the year 1896 was valued at $242,311,481, an increase of $1,604,111 over the previous year, while the value of non-metallic substances was $410,999,987, a decrease of $26,383,377 from 1895. A large part of this was due to the lower values of coal, stone, and a few other important substances, very little resulting from the smaller quantities.

The increase in copper has been extraordinary, the total gain amounting to 67,374,150 pounds.

The production of gold reached the great total of $57,000,000, a gain of $10,169,800. This extraordinary advance, which far surpasses the gain reported from any other country in the world, puts the United States far in the lead of the producing countries. Our output of gold was no less than 26 per cent of the total reported for the entire world.

The production of pig iron has been 8,768,000 tons. The decrease from 1895 being only 677,439 tons, or about seven per cent.

The production of lead from domestic ores amounted to 175,777 short tons, showing an increase of 20,863 tons over the preceding year. In addition to this there were 79,000 tons produced from imported ores or refined from imported bullion.

The output of quicksilver was 33,012 flasks of 70 1/2 pounds each, showing a decrease of 966 flasks from the previous year. The production continues to come wholly from the California mines.

The production of silver from domestic ores reached a total of 45,465,173 fine ounces, showing a decrease of 865,062 ounces. There were produced or refined from foreign ores and bullion by our smelters and other works no less than 40,000,000 fine ounces of silver, making the total quantity refined or put into final marketable form in this country 85,465,173 fine ounces.

The total production of spelter or commercial zinc for 1896 amounted to 77,044 short tons, showing a decrease of 4,774 tons from that of 1895.

The output of bituminous coal was 141,770,099 tons, showing a gain of 4,371,752 tons. On the other hand there was a decrease of 6,785,057 short tons in the anthracite production.

The total coal production was therefore 193,351,027 short tons, and the total decrease, as compared with 1895, was 2,410,305 tons.

THE CHRONICLE

C. C. DuBOSE, Editor and Proprietor.
COLUMBIANA, JAN. 7, 1897.

The National Bank of Illinois, one of the largest banks in the Union, having a deposit of $12,000,000 failed last week. The cause of this bank's failure was due to the fact that the officers failed to attend to their business.

PURSUANT to a resolution of the last congress, the Philadelphia mint is to begin this month to make experiments with new metals and combinations of metals to determine whether any improvement can be made in our present copper and nickel coinage. It may give us aluminum cents in place of the copper pieces now in use, and possibly a new species of 5-cent piece, made entirely of nickel, or perhaps, half nickel and half copper. There is so slight a suggestion of copper in the present 5-cent piece that it is a surprise to read that 75 per cent. of it is copper and only 25 per cent. nickel. The present cent contains 95 per cent. of copper, 2 per cent. of tin, and 3 per cent. of zinc. The objection is made to it that it is hard to distinguish by feeling between a cent and a silver 10-cent piece.

MAGNIFICENT RESOURCES

GOVERNOR JOHNSTON WRITES A SPLENDID LETTER.

REVIEWING OUR PROGRESS

Imbued With a Sanguine Spirit for Alabama's Future Prosperity and Development.

The Baltimore Manufacturers' Record in its issue of January 1, published letters from the governors of the various southern states treating the resources of an outlook for those states. The following letter from Gov. Johnston, of Alabama, appeared among them:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
MONTGOMERY, ALA., Dec. 19, 1896.
Editor Manufacturers' Record:

Nothing gives me more pleasure than to write of the resources of Alabama and it is especially a pleasure to communicate with the public on this subject through so friendly and sympathetic and appreciative a medium as the Manufacturers' Record. You have so often portrayed, in all their opulence, the varied resources of our natural wealth that I am fearful nothing new remains to be said to your wide and growing constituency of readers. Still, a really good story loses little in being told again, and in this age of competition iteration has become a prime necessity, if not an actual virtue. I have not neglected to study the resources and capabilities of other countries and other states, and the more I study them the more thoroughly I am satisfied that no equal area on the earth's surface exceeds this state in natural wealth and variety of productions combined. Take our coal measures, for instance. Our advantage does not lie in the mere fact that we have coal of an excellent quality for steam, iron-making and domestic purposes, and in quantity to supply the world for many generations, but in the further fact that this coal lies near the surface, and is more easily, more cheaply and more safely mined than in any other of the great coal districts yet opened up. The same thing is true of our iron ores. Add to this such proximity of the coal and ore as exists nowhere else on the globe, and we have the crowning fact of our situation so far as material wealth is concerned.

To this special and peculiar advantage and the forests of yellow pine, the fertility of soil, the variety of agricultural products and the genial climate which we possess in common with our neighboring commonwealths, and I am sure both the inventor and the settler can find in Alabama an invitation worth their while to accept.

The question naturally arises, what are the people already there doing with this natural wealth? I am glad to say that in spite of the poverty which they inherited from Apportionment, the people of Alabama have made a really marvelous progress in turning the potential wealth of nature into the beneficent products of the field, the mine, the forge and the factory. In spite of the hard times, the crippling of credit and the limitation on demand for consumption, they are still making progress, and I believe the development of the past is only a foretaste of that which is to come. A very encouraging thing to me is the strenuous and self-sacrificing efforts made by our people to resist and to overcome the adverse condition of the last few years, during which they have succeeded in adding to their productive capacity and increasing the number of their smokestacks. Under more favorable general industrial conditions, I confidently expect another period of development surpassing that of the last decade, but without that element of land speculation which always leaves so many bruises to cripple the feet of enterprises.

During the very hardest pinch of the panic a larger percentage of our iron furnaces continued in blast than in any other of the great iron districts, and their production more nearly kept pace with their normal output. The natural conditions which exist here enable us to economize in the cost of iron-making, and our furnaces meet the stress of the fight for life by establishing the fact beyond all doubt that Alabama can and does make iron cheaper than any state or country in the world, and she is now selling and exporting no inconsiderable quantity of pig iron to England, Germany, Italy and Spain. Our ironmasters have achieved these results, not merely by the old and familiar expedient of reducing wages, but by economies in all the details of their business, by utilizing by-products, by better methods which have increased the output from the same labor, machinery and material, while improving the quality. The outlook is satisfactory with our chief competitors, especially in Europe, will steadily increase, thus improving our opportunity to relieve by foreign shipment a glut at home.

The steady advance of our cotton mill industry is maintained with bright promise of more active development in the near future. In spite of the great development of our minerals, cotton growing continues to be the chief industry of the state. By the natural law of progress from the raw material to the machine, Alabama should long ago have become a great cotton manufacturing center. While iron making has gotten ahead and attracts by far the more attention, it has acted as a stimulus to the whole field of manufacture, and our people are becoming imbued with a good deal of enthusiasm on the subject of cotton mills. Those in operation are remunerative; several have begun operations in the last few months, some are being constructed, and a number of communities are planning and organizing for still more.

Our farmers are feeling the stress of low prices and there is very little money among them, but they are steadily producing more and more of the necessities of life at home and becoming yearly less dependent on the west for grain and meat. The importation of corn from other states has practically ceased. Hard pressed as they have been through the era of falling prices, yet as compared with those of many other states, particularly in the northwest, our farmers owe less money, are freer from mortgage and in a condition to honestly and sincerely invite immigration from less favored regions. The tendency to diversify their products was never so marked, and it is bringing such results as encourage perseverance along that line. Many localities are giving special attention to vegetable and fruit raising and grape culture. Indeed, this branch of soil cultivation has already become quite an industry, adding largely to the income of the state and demonstrating to the homeseeker that he can profitably employ his energies in other crops than cotton if he so desires.

The lumber industry continues to grow in importance as the use of our southern yellow pine becomes more general. The output has been fairly well maintained, and the mills have never ceased adding improved machinery and bettering their equipments, thus reducing cost and getting fair returns. There are still large bodies of virgin pine for sale at low prices, constituting an inviting field for the investment of capital. There is abundant room for a great development without an exhaustion of supply for many years to come.

Among the most encouraging and hopeful signs of the times is the gain in immigration, especially of a good class of people from the northwest. Our people here have long been holding out a cordial and sincere invitation, and we are all glad that it has at last been accepted. Several colonies have recently been established and are succeeding, increasing their numbers every month. Among the first legislative enactments I have approved on being inaugurated as governor, on December 1, was one to establish a charter for Fruiturst, a new town, built by new-comers, and I both hope and believe that I will have the pleasure of approving others of the same sort during my term of office. The people of Alabama are in hearty accord in their desire to welcome and encourage these new citizens. Our rate of taxation is low, there is no inflation of land values, and the sentiment to sustain and improve our public schools is fast becoming a sort of universal enthusiasm. The future in this regard is more than promising.

The near future will add considerably to the railroad facilities in Alabama. Work has begun on a road from Mobile to Jackson, Miss., which will add much to the importance of our seaport, while the prospect is good for the immediate construction of a line from Montgomery to Columbus, Miss., with something like 200 miles of track in Alabama.

Our people do not yield to discouragements, and they are making progress. Our public institutions, especially our schools, are gaining ground, and the thoughts and energies of the people are more and more being directed to the need and engaged in the effort to utilize our varied resources. The knowledge of machinery is becoming more general, the disposition to invest our little savings in the business of turning raw material into manufactures is steadily growing, and we are acquiring confidence in our own skill and ability to succeed in new departments of industry. We are all realizing that "the gods help them who help themselves," and while we invite and solicit the investment of capital from the outside, and need it, we are not sitting down and waiting for it, but going steadily forward in as large a way as our limited means will allow. We are not dispising the day of small things, and I have no doubt that the day of much larger things is high unto us.

We were indeed glad to see so many young people from Shelby and Wilsonville at the entertainment at the court house Christmas night. We assure them that we fully appreciate their generosity, and will always accord them a cordial, hearty welcome any time they visit our town.

Card of Thanks.

MR. EDITOR—I desire through you to return thanks to the kind friends who sent or brought presents to the donation party at my residence during the holidays, and especially to the thoughtful ones who suggested the party.

W. L. SINGOTT.

The Shelby County Medical Society met at the court house on Tuesday, the 5th inst. It being the regular time for the election of officers, the following gentlemen were elected to serve for the year 1897: Dr. W. S. DuBose, president; Dr. H. C. McAdams, vice-president; Dr. J. Reed Morgan, secretary and treasurer; delegates to the State Medical Association, Dr. J. Reed Morgan and Dr. H. C. McAdams, principals; Dr. H. I. Williams and Dr. E. G. Givhan, alternates.

Our young friends who aspired to win laurels on the stage, scored a signal success in their two performances given at the court house during the holidays. As proof of the fact that they displayed remarkable talent and pleased the public immensely at the first performance, they were requested to repeat it, and on the second night they drew quite as large a crowd as on the first. The net receipts of the two nights were $34.56, which will be applied toward completing the Baptist church. "The Last Leaf" is a difficult play to render, but all who saw it here will readily and gladly testify that it was a superb show from start to finish. We understand that this troupe contemplates showing at Montevallo. If they do we assure the people there that the play will entertain them highly, and that we have not overestimated the actors in the least. Of course they are not professionals, but they are magnificent amateurs.

Another Landmark Gone.

Died, at his home in this place on Tuesday night, January 5, 1897, after a lingering illness, Mr. A. D. Wortham, aged sixty-seven years.

This venerable and venerated servant of the Most High had lived in this community for many years, and was known as a man of wisdom, firmness, patient endurance under the rod of affliction, charitable, kind and affectionate in all the relations of life, in truth illustrating all those amiable Christian virtues inculcated and taught by his great Exemplar whose footsteps he tried to follow. Mr. Wortham was a Primitive Baptist because he believed in the doctrines of that sect. He was an unflinching, unswerving democrat, because he believed in the principles of that party. He was honest, truthful and sincere because he knew it was right. He was a man of convictions, and honestly followed those convictions. Oh, that we had more men like the lamented Wortham, upon whose wisdom, firmness and patriotism we could rely in hours of peril. May his many virtues be emulated by the generations to follow.

His funeral will take place at the Presbyterian church today at 10 a. m., and the services will be conducted by the Rev. S. S. Crumpton, pastor of Mt. Olive Primitive Baptist church of which Mr. Wortham was a member.

OBITUARY.

Mr. Daniel R. Munroe.

From the Anniston Hot Blast, Dec. 24, 1896.

Mr. D. R. Munroe died at his residence in Oxanna yesterday afternoon about 2 o'clock. He was considerably advanced in years, and injuries received in a fall about two weeks since proved fatal.

Mr. Munroe has held important positions with iron-making companies in this section for twenty years or more—first at Shelby, then at Cedar-town, and later here. He was a brave and faithful Confederate soldier during the war, a part of which period he was in the quartermasters department. Just about the close of the war he had charge of a train which conveyed Confederate treasure to the amount of several millions of dollars from Montgomery to Columbus, Ga., and for many years prior to the war was purchasing agent in this country for a big tobacco firm in France. He leaves a wife and several grown sons and daughters, besides a host of friends to mourn his taking away. The time for burial has not yet been set.

Many years ago, before the family came to Anniston, Mr. Munroe fell ill, and it was thought, died. The body was prepared for burial, a funeral preached, and the interment was about to take place, when a near relative pressed a last kiss upon his forehead. It was thought then the flesh seemed warm but no special notice was taken of it. The casket was closed, but there was considerable delay in lowering it into the grave, and before this was done it was seen that there was a slight moisture on the inside of the glass. The casket was then hastily reopened and further signs of life was noticed. It was not long until consciousness was restored, and a few weeks later Mr. Munroe had regained his usual health. On account of this experience Mr. Munroe requested that his body be kept out of the grave as long as possible and this wish will be respected.

H. J. Davis spent several days with Capt. Fowler during the holidays.

Garrett and John Brown were with us a few days Christmas week.

Miss Florence Hutchens is the guest of Miss Helen Boyer.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wilby were the happy guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Bolin a few days during Christmas.

W. W. McGowen, who has been attending a Theological school at Auburn, Ala., and W. J. Weldon, of Howard College, also, Miss Mattie Weldon, of Marion, honored us by their presence during the last days of 96. But sad to say have all returned to their course of studies. But June, oh June will sometime come.

M. P. Jackson, of Tallapoosa, spent several days with relatives here and returned home last Saturday. I wonder if the children were too tired to play this time?

The Santa Clause mansion was an entire success; many presents were distributed amongst the people of the surrounding country and all seemed to have a pleasant time. A nice talk was delivered by Rev. Parrish.

Wilsonville Society has been keeping the parties on the move for the last week. It seems to me that a night would seem incomplete without an entertainment of some kind. The party of the season was at the residence, and given by Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Weldon, (an observation party). Everybody seemed to be filled with joy the entire evening.

E. Williamson, Miss Lula Denier, J. M. Kytte, Miss Mattie Weldon, Justin C. Jackson, Miss Blossom Denier, Ganey Tinney, Miss Lucy Gwin, and W. R. Smith escorting E. Du Raus attended the grand entertainment, entitled "The Last Leaf," at Columbiana Christmas night. We take pleasure in congratulating the characters that were engaged in the drama; every part was acted to perfection. The comical speech was simply "out of sight."

NEW YEAR '97.

All hail the happy, bright new year
Which came to us last night;
May God his richest blessings shed
To make his prospects bright.

Enfolded close within its arms
Our next year's fate reclines.
Depending on the choice we make
To occupy the time.

It seems to us a sealed up book
With none its pages read,
Till days and nights unfold its leaves
As they pass by with speed.

Again it comes an actors stand
On which we act our part,
And be it acted as it may
It's written on the chart.

Again it comes a great free school
To which we all must go;
Our names are on the honor roll
Just as the work we do.

When this old year's passed away and gone
As other years have flown;
May we stand high on honor's roll
That shows the work we've done.

Harpersville Echoes.

Christmas passed off very quietly. The boy with the fire cracker had his fun.

Thomas Borum, of the far west, is visiting his father's family.

Mrs. Ann Elliott, of Post Oak, Texas, is visiting her mother, Mrs. Thompson.

Mrs. James Thompson and daughter Ella, of Collinsville, Texas, are visiting relatives here and on Kelley's creek.

Barney Russell and family, of Pratt City, spent Christmas with Harpersville relatives.

Miss Hannah Caldwell is visiting relatives in Talladega and Alpine.

Prof. H. J. Willingham and bride, of Lineville, spent a few moments with Harpersville friends last Thursday.

Mrs. Gorman, of East Lake, is visiting friends in the City.

Will Teague, of Florida, is visiting his sister Mrs. Dr. T. G. Nelson.

Capt. J. L. Waltheil, of Irondale, is expected to move to his Harpersville farm this week.

C. B. Henderson is making arrangements to move to Texas this week.

Bob Bevil, of Texas, and his brother Guss, of Birmingham, visited I. C. Shrader's family last week.

Misses Maggie and Jessie Bell, of the East Lake Atheneum, spent all of last week with home folks.

Miss Meeda Kidd spent the latter part of last week with Woodlawn relatives.

W. B. Hubbard spent Christmas, well I hardly know where; one day I heard from him at Columbiana, another day at Easonville and another time at East Lake and so on.

Sometime ago I stated that some of the people in this beat wanted a stock law. Well they still do, but suppose they adopt this as an amendment: make every man build his fence five feet high, stake and rider it and make the cracks so small that a mile can't crawl through them. With a little work and not so much talk this can be very easily done, and I am sure will suit the present demands.

The year 1896 has come and gone. To some it brought joy and happiness and to others despair and misery. It was a remarkable year—one that will be long remembered by us all. How many things that we did which we ought not to have done and how many things we left undone that we should have done. Did we give as much towards the spread of the gospel as we should? Did we go to church as much as we should? Did we visit the sick as much as we ought to have done. Did we pay our doctor who administered to us while we were scorching with a burning fever? Have we all paid our merchants who so kindly furnished us with food and raiment? These and a great many more questions should be thought of, and if we did not do as well as we should let us one and all try and make a wonderful improvement on the present year. Good bye old year, good bye. JAKE.

RE-PUBLICATION

Pickett's History of Alabama.

So many inquiries have been made for information of where copies of this work, by the late Col. Albert J. Pickett, could be had, and so many applications received for the purchase of the few remaining copies in the possession of the members of the family, both from this and other states, and the work has attracted such general interest, alike from the character and accuracy of its contents, that it has been determined to re-publish a limited edition of this valuable work, in improved form and perfect illustrations, and to offer it for sale at such a reasonable price as to insure that those who are desirous of securing subscribers, procure them.

To the inhabitants of this State, Georgia, Mississippi and Florida, there is no work that can supply the place of Pickett's History of Alabama. The early history of the South-west must ever remain a store of attractive and profitable study and entertainment to every scholar and public man.

A devotion of a lifetime of study and investigation, by the eminent author of this work, when the events were fresh in his patient-scrutiny, has been rewarded by the ascertainment of the exact truth, and has given this History a value not always distinctive of such record.

This work is being printed by an Alabama establishment, and it is to be hoped that the limited edition of 3,000 copies will be all sold in this State. Every family in Alabama should possess a copy, in order that the history of our State should be made familiar to all of its people.

The book will contain about 675 pages, in one volume, fully illustrated. Price $3.00 per copy, and will be ready for delivery about September 20.

Early to Bed, Early to Rise—Her Method of Work.

"My life is that of a peasant," writes Rosa Bonheur in Ladies' Home Journal. "I wake with the day and lie down to sleep almost at nightfall. Early in the morning I stroll in the park with my dogs or drive my pony cart through the forest of Fontainebleau (in the midst of which is her estate, Dy). Toward nine o'clock I take my seat at the easel and work until 11:30. Then I breakfast quite simply and afterward smoke my cigarette as I run through the daily papers. I resume my work at one o'clock and at five I go out for a walk. I love to see the sun sink behind the trees of the forest. I finish the day by reading. The books I prefer are those of travel, hunting and historical works. Often I read the Bible.

"Before commencing a picture I study my subject exhaustively, prefacing this work with conscientious studies from nature. I look for the exact sky and the exact ground that will suitably frame the subject, and not until then do I commence the work on the canvas. The ever-present desire to bring myself nearer to truth and an incessant research after simplicity are my two guides. I have never grown tired of study. It is to-day, and it has been during my whole life, a happiness to me, for it is with persistent work alone that we can approach the unsolved problem which more than any other elevates our soul and entertains in our thoughts of justice, of goodness, of charity."

The Evil Eye.

Savage people have a superstition that an evil eye may be cast upon a person and bring all sorts of trouble and misfortune. That seems like a pretty foolish notion, but it isn't much worse than some of the notions of the civilized people indulge in.

One worn out superstition is the belief that if a man inherits weak lungs from his parents he is pretty sure to die of consumption. The actual fact is that if such a man will only take proper care of himself he will really be safer from consumption than a careless person who has no inherited weakness. Carelessness is the real evil eye. Carelessness will develop a tendency to consumption in any body.

The lungs are composed of very delicate, sensitive tissue, even in the healthiest person; that is why they yield so quickly to the attack of tainted blood. If the blood is allowed to get into the lungs, impoverished and bile-poisoned, the seeds of consumption will spring up in the best kind of a constitution. The real consumption-taint is in the blood.

Hundreds of cases of so-called "hereditary" consumption have been completely and permanently rooted out of the system by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, simply because it gives the blood-making glands power to pour a fresh abundant supply of rich, red, healthy, blood into the circulation. This drives out all poisonous and unhealthy germs. It stops the waste of tissue and the formation of morbid deposits; builds up fresh, normal, healthy lung tissue and solid, muscular strength.

In all the weakened debilitated conditions which are the forerunners of consumption, Dr. Pierce's Discovery is the most perfect nutritive and strength-builder. It is assimilated by the weakest stomachs.

"IN THE CHRISTMAS,"

The Sage of Rocky Creek Looking Backwards.

Hank Williams and Widdler Biggers—When the Course of True Love Didn't Run Smooth for a Whole Lot—The Out Praying Prayer.

Every time I go down to the Flat Woods and back—across the bridge over the Jordan creek—I can't keep from thinking about Hank Williams and the widdler Biggers, and the scandalous confusionment which they got into onst upon a time. In them days, touchin which I now seat myself to drop you a few scatterin remarks, Hank Williams was livin right there at the old Williams' place on the hill this side of the creek, whilst the Widdler Biggers she was livin over across on the other side a mile and a half, or maybe a little better.

To Do About or Die.

At that time the Widdler Biggers was fat and fair and forty—already "broke and bridled," as Brit Foster were wont to say. But Hank Williams he was one of the most nervous and bashfullest men that I have ever scraped up an acquaintance with. He was jest about good grown then—stood full six feet in his socks and was a man amongst men. He had went through 15 or 20 bad fights and always whipped his man as easy as fallin off of a wet log. But when it come to the female generation—well, Hank Williams he want in the fight any to speak of. I have seen him git caught out amongst the women folks, as it were, and blamed if it didn't look to me like he would have everything on the sick list from a night sweat to a buck arger. I now recollect one time when a gang of us boys tolled Hank off to a break down dance over the hill country and turned him loose in the house where there was a tremendous big drove of girls and he was the only boy, and I'll be blessed if he didn't take a sudden case of measles and break out.

It was in the dead of winter—somewheres along between Christmas and New Year—and by this time Hank had worked up a furious bad case with the widdler. He had sent her his fine two-year-old turkey gobbler to make a Christmas dinner, and in hog kitchen time she had returned his double-breasted compliments by sendin him a big mess of backbone, and spare ribs, and sausages, and the like of that. "So far as anybody knows, Hank never did fool off any time writin love letters, with plenty of flowers and fancy trimmings thrown in for good measure. But yet still at the same time, anybody could shet one eye and see that he meant business over across the creek, and the widdler—well, she want gone nowheres.

Finally at last in them days it come to pass that a big circus was comin to town Friday night before New Year, and the time had now come for Hank Williams to do about or die.

"Cut the Pot, Woin or Lose."

That Wednesday mornin before the circus was to show on Friday Hank come by our house bright and early on his way to town. I had went out to the lot and was tendin to the stock when he rid by in a swingin gallop—which up to that time I never had seen him pass by before sunrise, nor ridin faster than a peart fox walk.

"Somethin's in the wind this mornin, Rufus," says mother to me, when I returned back from the lot. "Hank Williams is up and gone too outlandish soon and ridin most to furious like and fast."

But I didn't take any pratical notice of what was goin on till late that evenin when Hank come back from town. Then I could see where in mother had placed him dead to rights. He was now ridin in a spankin new buggy, with bright shinin harness and a red striped lap robe. Human nature is most in general always human, and so I naturally went out in the big road when I saw Hank comin, and helt him up and called on him to know what in the discovered world was goin on.

"Nothin in particular, Rufe," says he, "exceptin it is now or never with me and the widdler. The cards are comin my way this evenin, and to-morrow I will cut the pot, win or lose. We have made our arrangements to come and take in the show, hand in hand together, and then if the weddin don't come off in pursuit of adjournment, I will have to know the reason why. Rufe, you have travelled all the gait and covered all the ground. Spoin you come over and see me off in good and regular order."

Man sir, I can shet my eyes to-night and look back and see Hank Williams as he went forth that day to court the Widdler Biggers. He wore a full black suit of new store-bought clothes—fine as split silk and soft as the fur on a cat's back—and likewise a bell-crown stovepipe hat. In his outside left vest pocket he carried a new open-face silver watch, which you could hear it tick into the next room. On one finger he wore a gray gold ring, whilst the smell of musk was in his clothes and bear grease in his hair. And when he went out and driv off in his new buggy—with the bright shiny harness and red striped lap robe—I says to myself, says I—If the hamstrung holds and the traces don't break and the breechin don't fly up, there is plenty of fun in America yet.

A Time for Memory and for Tears.

In the meantime you must recollect, young and gentle reader, that there is many a slipperce betwixt the old spring down under the hill and the waters bucket on the back shelf. Did the Widdler Biggers go to the circus that day? She did. And Hank Williams—did he go with her? He didn't. But now as to the whyofores and the whencefores thereof, I can but only tell you like Hank told me the next time we and him met up together.

Everything went smooth and lovely, Rufe, till I get down there to the creek. Says Hank to me, "but as I driv across the bridge the machinery jumped a cog. Dabblame it, there is where I busted the jug and spilt my molasses, so to speak. You know I was drivin that big screw horse Ball, which I got in the swap with Will Tom Pickens, and which Will Tom had bought him from the widdler,

"Well, as I driv across the bridge, feelin as rich and handsome as any rosebud, I pulled out my watch and leant back to see what time of day it was. Right there—inthat very same sad minute old Ball tipped and fell to his knees, and then floundered around there so terrific till he hanged if it didn't look to me like he would tear the bridge down before he could catch on his feet onest more. In the general shake up and confusionment I dropped my watch and it rolled off of the bridge and into the creek below. I had saw right where it fell, and it didn't take me long to see what I had to do, or lose a bully watch. "So I driv out on the other side of the bridge, turned old Ball out to one side of the road, climbed out of my fine clothes and my stovepipe hat, and went down into the water after my watch. Now presently, whilst I was down there chin-deep in the water feelin for my watch with my toes—thinkin I would find it for certain before I made the dive—I looked up the hill and there was old Ball, polin off in a jog trot and headed for the widders with my fine new suit of store-bought clothes and my stovepipe hat in the buggy.

Then, man, sir, I come up out of that water like I was shot out of a cannon and put up the road after old Ball. I give him a close race for somethin better than a mile, and when finally at last I scrambled into the buggy from behind me was right there in sight of the widdler's house. Old Ball had slipped the bride and was draggin the lines on the ground. I couldn't pull him in, and the blamed old skate wouldn't stop for nothin. I talked to him kind and gentle like, then loud and vehement. I first begged him, and then cussed him, but daburn him he halt his gait and keep the road—never missed a lick uphill and downhill. You can see, Rufe, where somethin had to be done right away immediately, and a little sooner if possible.

"Consequently I clambered into a few of my clothes and then wrapped up snug and clost in one corner of my large and lovely lap robe. Likewise also, I pulled on my fine fur trimmed dogskin gloves and my stovepipe hat—which in the meantime it had fell out and got run over and mashed in the mud till it looked like the ragged edge of ruination. Time was so precious then—the moments flew so scandalously fast—and I done like you would do. Rufe—like any man would do in a bad case of pusheney. And to speak forth the God and washin truth, when I tell you I had on my stovepipe hat, a pair of gloves, a lap robe and a few undergarments—the story is told.

"This and so we reached the widdler's place. If I had but only belt the ribbons in one hand and a good whalebone whip in the other, I would of driv right on by there in a dead run. But in gentle remembrance of his corn and fodder in the past—for the sake of better and brighter days gone by—that blamed old horse turned out and trotted right up to the front gate.

"The widdler, it would seem, she was ready and a waitin—primped clean out of sight and dressed in an inch of her life.—Here she come prancin out to the buggy, with her ribbons and her finery naturally rustlin in the wind and whistlin at every step. We passed the regular compliments in regards to the weather, and when she wanted to know how I was comin on, I told her ruther poretly, thank the Lord. She wanted me to light and come in and let her fix me up as some snakeroot and pepper tea. But I was as hot as a fox right then and sweatin like a free nigger on election day. Then she put in and fixed the bride and took up the lines and crawled into the buggy—and we rid off towards town. The widdler she had circus on the brain, and nothin but the circus would fill the bill for her. She could tell that I was neither drunk nor crazy, and from my general appearances I reckon she thought I was too bad skeered and rattled to know anything for certain.

"As we driv on down the road I wondered in my soul what I must do. And what could I do (Rufe, but put my trust in the good Lord, and wait and watch and pray. In my mind and on the sly I prayed, and I do reckon I prayed the out prayinest prayer that ever went up to the throne of grace—prayin that somethin might happen to keep me from goin to town and to the circus with the widdler under the surroundin circumference.

We had went about two miles when all of a sudden we turned a bend in the road and driv up behind John Andrew Milligan and his folks in a wagon. It was a monstrous rough place in the road, and old Ball stopped so quick and sudden like till the couplin pin broke, the buggy come uncoupled, and me and the widdler went down in on a smash-up. She fell out one way and I fell out the other, whilst my new clothes tumbled out in a pile right there in the mud.

"Soon as I could come back to my right mind I gathered the folds of that lovely lap robe clost about me, and bowed my head and wept. John Andrew and his women folks took the widdler in the wagon with them, and they went on to the circus. I then put on the rest of my clothes, patched up the buggy and driv on back home—the saddest and most sorriest man I reckon in the round created world. That evenin I took my wagon whip and went out to the lot, and I didn't do a darn thing, Rufe, but light in and give old Ball the gonebyest most severest beatin that any horse ever toted out of this country.

"But now, as for me and the widdler, we have took out and quit henceforwards and forevermore. I ain't fit to be foolin and fumbilin around amongst the female generation, Rufe, and it is everlastingly too late for me to git fitten. And you are dead right in regards to one thing, Rufe—there is many a slipperce betwixt the old spring down under the hill and the water bucket on the back shelf."

Oldest Lock in the World.

The oldest lock in existence is the one which formerly secured one of the doors of Nineveh. It is a gigantic affair; and the key to it, which is as large as one man can conveniently carry, reminds one of the Scriptural reference to such instruments being carried on the shoulder. The exact words are: "And the key to the house of David I will lay upon his shoulder." This key to the lock from Nineveh is nearly 3½ feet in length and of the thickness of a four-inch drain tile.

FASHION LETTER.

Fur and Braid as Trimming Are Very Popular—Endless Varieties of Fabrics and Decorations—Notes About Wraps, Etc. [Special New York Correspondence.]

The smooth, beautifully dyed faced cloths in which tailors delight are the very best sort of background for the intricate and very effective braiding and arabesque decorations on applique so fashionable this winter. Braiding is likewise applied to satins, velvets and the handsomely dyed silk-faced velvets. Brown sateen braid with a tiny line of gold braid running close beside it is next in favor to black braid in the execution of this elaborate garniture. Borderings of fur are universal as a decoration on day gowns, evening toilets and wraps. Rich, expensive pelts take the lead among the wealthy, but this season there is an immense variety of what are called "fancy" furs, that for the first time in their history are considered by refined people as good enough for skirt borderings, edgings, etc.; e.g., electrical seal and a very fair reproduction of ruffon, the latter a soft-looking, close, full fur that in its gray-blue tone looks well in connection with any material of the same shade, or lighter or darker as may be. Without doubt dark furs are less trying to most people than light furs, but the hard shining surface characteristic of so many dark short-haired furs is to be avoided. Deep brown fur, like mink, seal, sable or otter, is most enhancing to a gray or brown dress, and, indeed, combines most admirably with most colors or color mixtures. Of all furs dead white ermine is most unbecoming to its wearer, unless she has a rose leaf complexion, and next is unbecomingness to ermine ranks chinchilla. The latter, if real, is a very beautiful fur, but it is greatly imitated and so vulgarized. The silver shadings of the genuine fur can never be satisfactorily copied.

A simple tailor costume has a skirt of russet brown cloth with sleeves and bolero of brown silk velvet. The back of the jacket is closely fitted, and in front turns back with large revers of ermine cloth trimmed on the edges with a narrow roll of dark mink. The seven-gored skirt is finished with three narrow bands of the cloth, showing a marline of velvet at the edges. The vest is of ermine cloth fastened with small gold and bronze buttons and trimmed with machine-stitched straps. Another similar mode for a more youthful wearer has a middy vest of the ermine cloth, with rows of brown gimp at the lower edge and five rows around the neck under the straight cloth collar. This vest has no opening on the front, and is hooked up the back. A third costume of the colored cloth is trimmed with bands of white cloth strapped over with rows of gilt and braid in groups of three, and finished on the front with small gold buttons.

A very costly and elegant costume of dark Russian green cloth has a bolero jacket of sealskin with a flaring fur collar at the back; a large "granite" muff and cloth and fur toque are en suite. Black is held in very special favor both here and abroad.

A somewhat eccentric taste for black cloth, yellow lace or brilliant Danish red velvet, with black chiffon and fur in combination, is manifested by certain settlers over the sea. Plain Venetian cloth, of exquisitely fine texture, is reckoned among the fabrics suitable for very stylish and recherche visiting and dinner gowns, and its light weight allows of more delicate colors being used for day costumes than would be possible for a less heavy textile.

Saving a reduction in the outline of the sleeves, there has been hardly any model worn during the last three years that may not be worn to-day. Affirming this, it will be almost needless to enumerate the different styles of wraps of every shape, jackets, long, short, tight-fitting, loose or half-loose fitting, sack back, empire back, French back, seamed or seamless, single or double-breasted, open-fronted, with narrow waistcoat, ample Louis waistcoat, also all sorts of bolero and other fancy styles; and shoulder capes with collars have aspired to reach the tops of the mother goose hats, capes with moderate collars turn-down style, vandyke pointed, tabbed or "battlemented" edges, capes long, short and medium, extremely full or only moderately so; capes of fur, velvet, cloth, broad-repped fabrics—and what more could one have, for the range extends from the enveloping redingote to the tiny shoulder collar, and from sable, seal and ermine to a flimsy French confection of lace chiffon, ribbon loops and two or three fetchy paste buckles.

DIVORCES GRANTED TO INDIANS.

Have Which the Courts Are Creating in Aboriginal Tribal Relations.

With most of the plains Indians marriage consists simply of picking out the maiden, leading her to a cabin or wigwam and installing her as mistress of the house and confidant. Sometimes with the necessary preliminary of giving the father a pony or two or an installment of blankets, and occasionally with some slight ceremony performed by a chief or medicine man. And when the brave grows tired of his partner he can get rid of her as easily as he won her.

The people who are now flocking to the Dakotas or Oklahoma to get divorces would be supremely happy if they could throw off the galling bonds of wedlock as easily as does the reservation Indian. The fact having been formally announced by the head man of the clan, the divorce takes place when the tribe is gathered and dance. When all are assembled and the circle formed, the discontented warrior strikes a drum used by the revelers, gives away a few presents oftentimes making a present to the squaw he intends to take next, and then in a short, bombastic speech he stigmatizes his wife by giving her over to the tender mercies of other braves, while they look upon him enviously and consider that he has performed an act of bravery in his desertion.

Often as many as half a dozen divorces are thus obtained at a single dance. No tedious waiting, no courts, no lawyers and no trouble about alimony or the custody of children. And the squaws thus cast off, as a general thing, seem to take it as a matter of course, and before the close of the dance are using the wiles known and used by the women of the world over in an effort to repair as speedily as possible the break in their hearts and matrimonial experience.

With the taking of land in severalty and putting on of citizenship, however, the Indian finds that he has cemented the ties that were so loose before, for the courts everywhere are deciding that the tribal marriages are legal and binding upon the Indian who becomes a citizen. And if the weight of one legal marriage wears somewhat heavily upon a white man, how must it be with the red man, who has contracted two, three, four or even more alliances which the court now declares legal and at the same time takes away his former avenue of relief?—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Fish Found on Land.

A very curious species of fish which lives on dry land for ten months in the year was recently discovered by Dr. Suard in the Niore district of the French Soudan, some 500 miles from the coast. This fish belongs to the family of Siluri, and very much resembles the Clarias. It lives in the marshes which are formed during the two months of rainy season in that zone, and after that time it hides in holes in the ground, which the fish leaves at night to search for its food, consisting mainly of millet seed. Dr. Suard named this fish the Clarias Lazera, and describes its appearance, which differs from the Siluri mainly in the number of barbs, of which the newly-discovered has eight, all of which are strongly developed. This species differs from the African mudfish, Troglodytes, in that it does not close itself up in a capsule during the hot and dry season, like the latter fish, which remains in a condition of semi-catalepsy during summer. The Clarias Lazera only hides during the hottest hours of the day, and is out on dry land every night throughout the year.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

ALBERT SYDNEY WILLIS.

Death of the United States Minister to Hawaii.

The Anxieties of His Position Undermined a Vigorous Constitution, and When Disease Attacked Him He Gradually Succumbed.

HONOLULU, Jan. 7. VIA SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 15. (Correspondence The United Associated Presses, per steamer Monowai.)

United States Minister Albert S. Willis died at his residence yesterday at 8 a. m., after several months' illness. The direct cause of death was pneumonia, which he first contracted in San Francisco early last year. His condition has been at times such that gave his family hopes of his ultimate recovery, and again it was precarious to a degree that filled his physicians with grave alarm. A few days ago his condition was much improved and his family renewed their hopes, but the change for the better was but temporary. He has been surrounded at all times by the best medical talent in the city and every care was given the minister, but in spite of a vigorous constitution, which has assisted him in battling the disease, he succumbed after long and severe suffering.

Directly the intelligence of the death of the minister was received by the government the flags on the judiciary building and military headquarters were lowered to half-mast. Most of the business houses and the shipping followed suit as soon as the death was known.

Mrs. Willis is nearly prostrated from the long care of her husband. The family expects to sail with the remains on the steamer Australia the 13th. The Hawaiian government will accord a state funeral to the deceased representative of the United States to-morrow. The body will lie in state during the morning in the former throne room. Funeral services will be held at 3 p. m. in Central Union church.

The procession to the cemetery, where the body will be placed in the receiving vault until the sailing of the steamer, will be preceded by the local military and a battalion from the United States steamer Alert. President Dole and the chief officials of the government will follow the mourners.

It will be the most imposing funeral since the burial of Kalakaua. Mr. Willis left a small estate, but ample life insurance.

Albert Sydney Willis was born in Shelby county, Kentucky, in 1843, and served as a democratic representative from the Fifth Kentucky (Louisville) district in the Forty-fifth to the Forty-ninth congress inclusive, when he was succeeded by Mr. Caruth. He was a favorite lieutenant of Mr. Carlisle and maneuvered the forces of the latter for the speakership to which office Mr. Carlisle was chosen in the Forty-eighth congress.

After the mission of Paramount Commissioner Blount to Hawaii and the report he made to the president, alleging that Queen Liliuokalani had been wrongfully unseated from the throne of the Hawaiian islands by United States intervention, Mr. Willis was appointed by President Cleveland, in September, 1893, minister to Hawaii, and was sent out with sealed instructions to restore Liliuokalani to her throne on condition that she grant general amnesty to those concerned in setting up the provisional government and recognize all its bona fide acts and obligations. The queen refused to do this, and the upshot was that Mr. Willis eventually recognized the Dole government, and was subsequently formally accredited to it.

The anxieties of his position had a marked effect upon his health and appearance. When he left for Honolulu he was a fine specimen of physical development, with a full black beard and hair. When he returned on leave two years later his hair was white and he was in appearance a wreck of his former self. He discharged his exceedingly difficult duties in Hawaii with marked tact and discretion, and was popular there in spite of the adverse circumstances which surrounded him from the start.

JEFF WALLACE, a prominent attorney of Magnolia, Ark., was found dead near his home on the 15th. It is thought by some that he was murdered.

THE available cash in the treasury on the 15th was $230,876,402; gold reserve $141,056,870.

HON. ALBERT S. WILLIS, United States minister to Honolulu, died January 6. He was a native of Kentucky.

FAILURES the past week have been 435 in the United States, against 395 last year, and 71 in Canada, against 81 last year.

THOMAS GODFREY, a prominent grocer of Lexington, Ky., was assassinated on the 13th, by two unknown men in a dispute over the price of the drinks.

An accident, in which four persons were instantly killed and one fatally injured, occurred at Pottsville, Pa., on the 13th.

REPRESENTATIVE SPENCER of Mississippi on the 15th introduced a bill in congress to buy Cuba for $300,000,000.

Senator Lexow Getting After Them in the New York Legislature.

ALBANY, N. Y., Jan. 16.—In the senate Senator Lexow offered a resolution for an investigation of the existence of monopolies and trusts. He asked that this resolution be made a special order for next Thursday. The motion to make the resolution a special order for Tuesday was adopted.

The Ohio Senator Will be Secretary of State—Ex-Gov. John D. Long, of Massachusetts, Supposed to be Stated for the New England Member, and Gen. Alger, of Michigan, Considered for Secretary of War.

CANTON, O., Jan. 15.—Senator Sherman, who, this afternoon, authorized the United Associated Presses to positively announce that he has accepted the portfolio of state, and ex-Gov. John D. Long, of Massachusetts, who will in all probability be in Maj. McKinley's cabinet, sat down at table with the president-elect to-day. The other guest at luncheon was Senator Burrows, of Michigan. Senator Sherman arrived at the house about an hour and a quarter before noon and left for Washington at 2 o'clock. He had a long talk with Maj. McKinley, and they discussed many men and measures. The formation of the cabinet was the main topic of conversation. Senator Sherman said appointments and the organization of the work in his department would not be considered till after the inauguration of Maj. McKinley. It is understood that the appointment of a first assistant secretary of state was not discussed to-day, but the gossips have it that John Russell Young, of Philadelphia, is under consideration. Senator Sherman was in excellent spirits and seemed full of vigor.

The visit of ex-Gov. Long following so closely upon that of Senator Lodge, of Massachusetts, is construed to mean he is not unwilling to accept a place in Maj. McKinley's cabinet. Senator Lodge assured Maj. McKinley that there were no objections to the appointment of Gov. Long on the part of the Massachusetts republicans, and it may be deemed reasonably certain that he will be the New England member of the cabinet. Maj. McKinley and Gov. Long had a long talk and the latter left for the east by way of Cleveland at 1:30. It is not thought that the particular place in the cabinet which is likely to be offered Gov. Long has been determined. No tender of a portfolio was made to-day. Gov. Long said he simply came to confer with Maj. McKinley.

Senator J. C. Burrows, of Michigan, came to see the president-elect in the interest of Gen. R. A. Alger, whom he hopes will be appointed secretary of war. Senator Burrows said the republicans of Michigan had counted upon Gen. Alger, and that he had the hearty endorsement of the two senators. Gen. Alger is also being urged by the old soldiers of the Union armies. Senator Burrows did not indicate that the portfolio had been tendered Gen. Alger, but the belief is pretty strong here that it will be.

SHERMAN INTERVIEWED.

The Coming Secretary of State on the War in Cuba and the Tariff.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Jan. 16.—Senator Sherman passed through Pittsburgh last night from Canton, en route to Washington. Senator Sherman said:

"It begins to look as though Spain would grant Cuba some kind of autonomy which will speedily end the war. If the Spanish government should grant to the people of Cuba the same rights that are accorded to the people of Spain it would have much to do with ending the struggle. I am in favor of non-interference with the affairs of Cuba. About all we want to do is to buy products in the island and sell her all the goods we can. I do not believe there is any reliable news coming from the war. We have no knowledge of what our representative, Mr. Lee, reported to the president, except as might be inferred from the message, and one can readily understand that it might be embarrassing to him in his relations with the Spanish authorities at Havana, if the full text of his report were made public. We do know, however, that the reports from Cuba, published in the newspapers every morning, are very unreliable."

"How about an extra session of congress?" Senator Sherman was asked.

"It is absolutely certain that we will have an extra session, and the earlier it is held the better. It is very necessary that we should have a prompt readjustment of the tariff, and it is probable that the extra session will be confined to tariff legislation, though, you know, congress can consider any subject once it is called in session."

DEFENDS HIS DAUGHTER.

Maj. Higley Says Mrs. Dimond Did Not Elope from Honolulu, as Charged.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Ia., Jan. 16.—When Maj. M. A. Higley, of this city, the father of Mrs. W. Dimond, who is reported to have eloped from Honolulu with Charles Dillard Wilson, was shown the dispatch, he denied there had been an elopement. He asserted that his daughter came to San Francisco upon the advice of physicians to recover from the effect of cruel treatment inflicted upon her by her husband, who has brought suit for divorce at Honolulu.

Maj. Higley stated that his daughter had made answer to the bill with countercharges, and had left yesterday by the steamer Coptic for Honolulu to fight the case. She learned of the scandalous charges as soon as she arrived at San Francisco, and accused her husband of instigating them. Maj. Higley declared she had traveled alone.

ANTI-ANNEXATION.

A Movement in Hawaii That Came to Nothing.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 16.—Advices per steamer Monowai from Honolulu says:

The proposed anti-annexation organization, headed by British and German planters, came to nothing. It proved impossible for them to secure any support from the Americans, who are said to be a unit for annexation. A strong minority of British residents favor it in spite of their own patriotic feelings.

PASSED SPURIOUS COIN.

Two Well-Dressed Negroes Arrested at Alton, Ill.

ALTON, Ill., Jan. 16.—Cornelius Herndon and John Richardson, a pair of well-dressed negroes, were arrested by the Alton police Thursday on charges of passing counterfeit $5 gold pieces upon Alton merchants. A handful of the spurious coins were found in the pockets of the negroes, who have been turned over to the United States marshal. They refuse to tell anything of themselves further than that they live in St. Louis.

ENGLISH DIPLOMACY.

The Treaty of Arbitration May Mean Much to England in the Game of European Politics—There is Evidently Something Under the Surface that Secretary Olney Has Seen But Which the Senate May Unearth.

NEW YORK, Jan. 16.—A special cable dispatch to the Sun from London says: It is important that the American people should understand that there is much more involved in the pending treaty of arbitration between Great Britain and the United States than the sweet aspirations toward the blessings of universal peace. The motive of President Cleveland Secretary Olney may be as pure and guileless as the patriotism, but those of the other parties to the proposed agreement are not. The exigencies of European politics have brought Lord Salisbury to consent to proposals which 18 months ago he regarded as political child's play. A repetition of such a disaster as the Venezuelan message, which fell upon England at the most critical moment of modern English diplomacy, is at all events dangerous, and removal of such danger is worth paying for in the estimation in the British foreign office.

Great Britain's greatest satisfaction in making the treaty of arbitration with America is in the effect it will have in the vital struggle which British interests and British prestige are waging with the rival powers of the old world. Lord Salisbury has succeeded in creating the impression in the other European courts and capitals that England's relations with the United States are now so close and friendly that she could rely upon American support in case her combined enemies should push her too hard. There is no doubt whatever that Russia, and perhaps France and Germany, are inclined to accept this view of the situation. It will be of immense diplomatic advantage just now to Lord Salisbury if he is able to strengthen and confirm this impression. Indeed, the whole political situation in Europe might be changed by it. It is the cleverest attempt ever made to place the trump card of American influence in the great game of European politics, and it is likely to succeed unless the senate makes it plain that the United States is not even indirectly interested on the side of Great Britain in European affairs.

It is pointed out that Russia, which is the traditional friend of the United States in Europe, would have been willing to make an arbitration treaty with the United States, which involved the acceptance of the Monroe doctrine, and would have used her influence to secure a similar acknowledgment from the other continental powers. The impression prevails that the administration at Washington, for some reason, preferred the English to the larger continental influence. There are no means of learning whether it was Russia that missed the political opportunity, or the Washington authorities failed to offer it to her.

At all events it is felt at St. Petersburg that Lord Salisbury is making an extraordinary use of the pending arbitration treaty as a factor in European politics. If there does not come from America a distinct disavowal in some shape, Europe will be likely to accept the impertinent assumption, which is widely held in this country, that the ratification of the arbitration treaty will be a mere preliminary to a full offensive and defensive Anglo-American alliance.

A GREAT CUBAN VICTORY.

Reported Capture of Santa Clara by Gomez After Desperate Fighting.

NEW YORK, Jan. 16.—The Press claims to have received news through private channels that Gen. Maximo Gomez stormed and captured the important city of Santa Clara on January 9, and is now moving on Havana with 18,000 men.

The famous negro cavalry leader, Quentin Bandera, was mortally wounded, the Press says, and Gen. Luque, commanding the Spanish, was also wounded.

The news received said that the losses were: Spanish, estimated killed and wounded, 900; prisoners, 700; cannon captured, 18; battle standards, 4; rifles in the Spanish arsenal, 5,000, with plenty of ammunition: Cuban killed and wounded, 1,500, which is 600 more than the Spanish loss.

According to the Press advices, the garrison of Santa Clara had been reduced to 2,000 men, while Gomez had 8,000 men, 6,000 being armed. On January 5 he invested the city, which was well fortified.

Gomez sent the infantry under Gen. Rabi to the west of the city. The cavalry, 4,000 strong, under Quentin Bandera, was placed on the other three sides, its main strength being on the west. On the 6th, 7th and 8th there were skirmishes. Gen. Luque, commander of the garrison, being wounded on the latter day. On the 14th, at daybreak, the Cubans closed in on the town, the cavalry charging over the Spanish earthworks and putting the enemy to flight. Bandera fell while leading his men, and died soon after. Gomez gave his men only a night's rest. Then leaving a garrison of 1,500 men, he pushed on to the west.

No sooner had the news of the fall of Santa Clara reached the planters round about than they began to flock to Gomez's standard. Every mile he went he got new recruits, and now has an army of 18,000 well-equipped men.

THE CHEAPEST MONEY MARKET.

Lower Rates of Interest Charged in New York Than Anywhere Else in the World.

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—The weekly statement of the associated banks to be issued to-morrow will show a large increase in the cash on hand, as the consequence of an unusual state of affairs in the money market. About a month ago the presidents and leading officers of some 40 banks belonging to the clearing-house attended a dinner at the Union League club, given by Henry W. Cannon, president of the Chase national bank. At this gathering an understanding was reached that no call loans, or in other words loans repayable on demand, should be made at a rate less than two per cent. per annum. For three or four weeks previously most of the call loans had been made at 1½ per cent. At this rate the banks did not consider that they were receiving an adequate return on their money.

During the present week the borrowers found that they could obtain money from the trust companies, insurance companies and other large lenders at 1½ per cent. Accordingly they shifted their loans to a large extent, that is they paid off the loans to the banks and got accommodated from the lenders, whose rates were one-half per cent. lower. The banks secured only a small part of the new loans. The rapid accumulation of money in their vaults which was earning nothing at all finally brought them to a realization that their agreement to keep the call money rate up to two per cent. could no longer be adhered to with advantage, and yesterday most of them were accepting offers of 1½ per cent. Although the tendency of money is downward all over the world, it is cheaper in New York than anywhere else.

London Chamber of Commerce to New York Chamber.

NEW YORK, Jan. 16.—The following dispatch was received yesterday:

LONDON, Jan. 15, 1897. Chamber of Commerce of New York: London Chamber of Commerce desires to express conviction that the treaty just signed will tend to increase friendly feeling between the great English-speaking nations and promote extension and security of their commercial and material relations.

THE CLASSIFIED SERVICE.

Bill to Make Retirement Compulsory at Sixty-Five.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—Mr. Gillette (rep., Mass.) introduced a bill in the house yesterday, fixing the age for retirement from the classified service of the United States at 65 years. All of the United States officers, except the person holding them becomes 65 years old, and no person more than 65 years old is to be eligible to appointment. The act, however, is not to apply to Union veterans of the late war or to their widows.

DUN'S TRADE REVIEW.

A Repetition of the Happy Experience of 1870 Foreboded by Present Conditions.

NEW YORK, Jan. 16.—R. G. Dun & Co. say in their weekly review of trade this morning: The greatest growth and prosperity the country ever seen came suddenly in 1870, after several months of pig iron and local specie resumption had not yet brought the benefits expected. It takes time for new confidence to reach through easier money markets, large orders, resumption of mills, expanding employment, and larger distribution, to the results which make still greater and lasting gain possible. Such gradual and steady improvement has been the case for more than two months. The output of pig iron has gained 41.6 per cent. since October 1. The output of coke has increased 82.7 per cent. since October 1. Sales of wool have again become large. Money markets feel a steady increase in demand for commercial and manufacturing loans. Additional works have gone into operation each week in January, and the working force is larger than at any time for six months. The gain may be ascribed to the deliberate judgment of the ablest and most prudent men in business.

It is not time for high prices. Many who are anxious to get early hold on the market are making for the moment lower prices than they could afford to maintain. With the increase in output of pig iron from 18,728 tons weekly, against 142,278 last month, the price is a shade lower at the east and Chicago, but heavy purchases already advanced Bessemer's shade at Pittsburgh. Steel bars have been reduced to one cent and some other finished products one dollar per ton, but the demand is on the whole steadily growing. The coke output has risen from 50,000 to 94,000 tons weekly, and minor metals are a shade stronger.

Textile manufacturers are not encouraged by the demand for goods, though more print cloths were sold this week in January. Lower prices are expected in goods, and slow buying is not unusual since cotton has fallen 17.8 per cent. from September 11; print cloths 7 per cent., bleached muslin 5 per cent., and goods 2½, 3 and 4 per cent. Though woolen goods do not improve, there have been purchases by large mills which cover for two weeks of January 1, 1,100,000 yards of the three chief materials, against 1,187,600 last year. Some heavy purchases of leather indicate that some shoe manufacturers are seeing their way to more active work, and that the market from the east in January thus far are 20 per cent. better than last year. Hides at Chicago are 24 per cent. lower.

Clearinghouse exchanges for the month thus far are less than one per cent. below last year's, though still 25 per cent. above the year 1892, the year of greatest prosperity. The railroad earnings and tonnage for January thus far are light, owing to western storms, but Denver and Chicago are 100 per cent. less than last year. The Pennsylvania and some other roads have commenced to buy rails and iron. The Columbia bridge alone calling for 7,000 tons of steel and a terminal improvement for the Erie will cost $1,000,000. The wheat market is a shade stronger, closing a quarter of a cent lower. Western receipts for the week, 1,605,032 bushels, against 2,016,274 last year, are checked by storms and by current prices in view of farmers' expectations.

Atlantic exports were 1,454,498 bushels, four inches less than last year's, and 4,483,190 last year. Traders begin to realize that enormous exports of corn are taking the place of wheat in foreign consumption.

Cotton took a rise in the eighth month's estimate without change in conditions. The money market has been disturbed by a combination of large bankers not to lend on call below 10 per cent. and a cash market all sorts of financial institutions to take the market, caused payment of bank loans for some millions and left supplies of funds so heavy that time loans were sharply marked down. More was done in commercial paper, though offerings increased but moderately.

Receipts from the interior exceeded shipments by $1,500,000. Exports of cotton exceeded last year's, for the week 8 per cent., while imports fell 10 per cent. below last year's. Failures for the week have been 455 in the United States, against 395 last year, and 71 in Canada, against 81 last year.

The Suez canal is only ninety-nine miles long, but it cuts off 4,000 miles of journey by ship from England to India. The Nicaragua canal would be 180 miles long, including the course through the lake, and it would cut off 11,000 miles between Portland and New York, and nearly as much between Portland and Liverpool.

"Why the South is Poor" is the subject of an editorial in the Manufacturers' Record. One of the reasons is given as follows: "This week a lion, or great northern diver, was killed in a mill pond in Wake, North Carolina, and thirteen men put in nearly a day killing it. They took stations with guns around the pond and had to tire the bird out. It dived until it could do so no more. Thirteen grown men put in one whole day tiring out a lion. At fifty cents a day, a low estimate, this lion cost $6.50 in the time of the men it took to catch it. It is this 13-to-1 business that keeps the South poor—13 men to 1 lion, 1 rabbit, 1 squirrel, 1 fish, and all that. To put it in another way, too much idleness, too much frolicking for the amount of work that is going on."

REV. T. DEWITT TALMAGE, in his sermon Sunday morning, referred to the arbitration treaty in the following language:

"The mightiest, grandest movement for driving brutal war out of earth dates from January 11, 1897. The men who on either side of the sea did most to effect that plan of arbitration have made themselves immortal. The evening of the present administration of the United States government has been honored with the gladdest event of eighteen centuries. All civilized nations will copy the sublime example. I implore the illustrious senate of the United States to allow nothing to interfere with a vote of ratification, that the bells of all christendom may ring out, 'Peace on earth good will to men.' Senators, many of you my personal friends, let me say this is the opportunity of your lives. By emphatic and enthusiastic vote rise to the splendor of all the might of heaven. Let the 'aye, aye,' of our American senate resound through all the capitals of Europe and make all the arsenals and armories of the world hear that there shall be no more murder among nations. The worst thing you can do for a man is to kill him. The best thing you can do for a man is to save him."

WAS HE A PROPHET.

Forty years ago Macaulay, the historian, wrote as follows:

The day will come in the United States when the multitude, distressed by hard times, will be called upon to choose a legislature. On one side is a statesman, preaching patience, respect for vested rights, strict observance of public faith.

On the other are demagogues ranting about the tyranny of capitalists and usurers. I seriously apprehend that the people of the United States will in some such season of adversity do things which will prevent prosperity from returning; that they will act like people who should in a year of scarcity devour all the seed corn, and thus make the next year a year, not of scarcity, but of absolute famine. There will be fear, spoliation; the spoliation will increase the distress; the distress will produce fresh spoliation.

When a society has once entered on this downward progress there is nothing to stop it. Either civilization or liberty must perish. Either some Caesar or Napoleon will seize the reins of government with a strong hand, or your republic will be as fearfully plundered by barbarians in the twentieth century as the Roman empire was in the fifth; with this difference, that the Huns and Vandals, who ravaged Rome, came from without, while your Huns and Vandals will have been engendered in your own country by your own institutions.—Baltimore Manufacturers' Record.

THE JURIES—NOT THE LAW.

Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle.

A late number of the Atlanta Constitution has an editorial strongly criticizing the manner in which men who commit homicides are allowed to go unpunished by our courts, and calling for such changes in the present laws as are necessary to correct the evil, if it be true that the law is to blame. The Constitution says:

"Something must be done in Georgia; some change must be made before murder and assassination become too common. If our laws are inadequate they should be strengthened; if our courts are too liberal, or if they become affected by the maudlin sentimentality that is ever ready to have a sigh or drop a tear over the fate of some bloody-minded brute, then there should be a change to sterner methods."

"Something must be done to secure the swift and sure punishment of those who deserve punishment. If not, the people cannot be expected to respect the law as they should or depend on its operations to secure their safety. When that respect and dependence is lost, society is not only threatened, but soon disintegrates."

The evil to which the Constitution refers is not an imaginary one. It is well recognized and it is a growing evil. It is our observation, however, that the fault is not with the law but with the maudlin public sentiment and the weakness of juries. We will suppose a homicide occurs in Augusta today at which the entire community is shocked, and where the condemnation of the slayer is unanimous among the witnesses of the crime. If the trial should occur at once, justice would probably be meted out. But it is postponed until the second or third term of court following its commission. By that time the dead man is forgotten.

Sympathy for him no longer weighs against the sympathy for the living man, who is being prosecuted. Lawyers for the defence represent their client as a poor helpless man in the clutches of the law, hounded by the officers, encompassed by the unbounded resources of the state—a poor persecuted dove among a flock of bloodthirsty hawks seeking his blood.

The prisoner is no longer before the jury and public as a man who has outraged the law and the peace of society, but as a poor helpless, very-much-imposed upon man, whose life is being cruelly sought by the blood-thirsty solicitor-general and heartless officers of the law. The state is actually thrown on the defensive and lawyers for the prosecution almost apologize for having to perform a very distasteful duty in prosecuting "the unfortunate prisoner." Before the case is half through the prisoner becomes the especial object of sympathy as he sits among a group of weeping female relatives whose business it is to enlist the sympathies of the jurors in every artful manner possible and the jury feels that its highest duty is to rescue "the unfortunate prisoner" from the unfeeling clutches of the state. This is the sentimental farce that is witnessed at the trial of every white man in Georgia for a serious offense.

What is needed to cure this maudlin sentiment is a prompt trial. Let the prisoner go to trial bearing the burden of whatever public indignation his crime may have aroused. The law provides safeguards for the selection of the jury so as to secure unbiased men, and it clothes the prisoner with the presumption of innocence. He has a fair chance to prove justification, if it existed, and if he cannot do so out of the mouths of witnesses when the details of the transaction are fresh in their minds, then let him suffer the penalty. A few speedy trials and just convictions would have a wholesome effect upon the public mind, and go far to rebuke the maudlin sentimentality which makes such trials by jury a farce and prosecution of white men for murder a legal burlesque.

The Cost of it.

Birmingham Tribune.

The present constitution of Alabama has cost this state by retarding progress and enforcing a stingy non-progressive government, a government which repelled capital and labor, more money than the state of Alabama would sell for if put up for the highest bidder. The inability of our state under its constitutional tax restrictions to educate the people, so they would know something, to build schools and show the outside world, the home seekers, that we had some progress, some civilization in our state, alone has cost millions. By nursing non-progress, we have repelled thousands of home seekers, and driven back millions of capital which would have located among us. It should be noted that we as a whole are not very far from a semi-barbaric condition; that our ignorance is the second greatest in the United States, and that for the ten years between 1880 to 1890 Alabama was the only known state where ignorance crawled up from 52 to 54 per cent. This the reader can see is a bad comparative showing for a state which boasts of its wealth, progress and civilization. Indeed our state is as compared with the great progressive commonwealths of the United States as non-progressive, ignorant as Spain's compared to other nations. Still some 2x4 fool will rise up and say a constitution will cost the state $50,000, hence for that reason we should not have one. In response to this piece of gratuitous folly a thousand little fools who have been reared in ignorance, and kept in ignorance by a non-progressive state, a state whose progress is handicapped by a constitution, clap their little hands gleefully and say, no, we can't afford a constitutional change. This class of editors and people haven't sense enough to know what is the matter with them. Unfortunately for Alabama the fools are largely in the majority, and are as our constitution shows, controlling our state. We even find a few republican demagogues who ought to have more delicacy, opposing so needed an improvement in our fundamental law.

The Swiss Parliament.

A parliament at which the discussions are carried on in three different languages is probably unique. The country where this singular fact occurs is well known to English tourists, viz. Switzerland. But few, I believe, have ever had an occasion to be present at the sitting of a Swiss parliament.

The languages spoken by the members are French, Italian and German. Italian, true, is not as often employed as the other two, the members for Tessin, a canton in the south, very often delivering their speeches in the French language. As almost every educated Swiss speaks French and German, members are therefore able to understand each other's speeches, although spoken in a different language to their own.

It also often happens that when a French speaking member wishes to make a stronger impression on the German speaking part of the house he delivers his speech in German, and a vice versa. —Parson's Weekly.

Choosing a Vocation.

Some people often misinterpret their life work. I remember a young man who imagined he had received a call to the gospel ministry. The young man stated that he was ready to be ordained and began the work. He said he had received a vision, and emblazoned on the sky were the letters G. P. C. He interpreted them, "Go Preach Christ." A member of the church who was present asked if the letters could not mean, "Go plow corn." Some men have an idea they can do something when they can't. They should learn to gauge their work by the measure of their abilities.—Rev. Dr. Landrum.

"Julia, when did you have your dining room ceiling done over in those lovely shades of red and brown?" "Ten bottles of my catchup I left on the sideboard burst last night."

The supposed grave of Eve is visited by over 40,000 pilgrims in each year. It is to be seen at Jeddah, in a cemetery outside the city walls. The tomb is fifty cubits long and twelve wide. The Arabs entertain a belief that Eve was the tallest woman that ever lived.

Mrs. E. B. Nelson was called to Weaver's Station last week by the illness of her mother, Mrs. Anna Hubbard, who died Sunday night at 11 o'clock, aged 68 years.

Mrs. Laura Armstrong and Miss Fannie Longshore have purchased the stock of millinery of J. M. Spencer, and will open a business in the one story brick next door to Spencer's.

H. E. REYNOLDS, Blocton, Ala.

Miss Sadie Williams entertained a number of friends at a tea Friday evening. The young gentlemen furnished unlimited amusement for the young ladies by each undertaking the task of hemming the apron of his best girl, for which the most efficient was awarded a prize. We imagine that for variety of execution and design their work was unique.

A New Enterprise.

M. F. Deemer, of Philadelphia, Pa., is here to establish an entirely new enterprise—new for this section at least. He has purchased the farm of Simon Emby, two miles north of this place, and has about concluded negotiations for the farm of E. B. Nelson adjoining it. It is his intention to establish a goat ranch. He will start with perhaps two or three thousand goats. The grazing in the vicinity of his property is most excellent, and the thrifty, festive Billy, his wife and offspring can take care of themselves almost the year through with practically no expense or attention. He has contracted for the erection of a huge shed, 10x500 feet, in which to feed and house them. As soon as his dwelling can be repaired he will move his family out to his farm. His brother in Philadelphia is interested with him and will likely move here later on. At present the enterprise is an experiment. If it pans out as he believes it will these gentlemen contemplate putting in a tannery.

We hope they will meet with hearty encouragement, and that they will make a success we have not the slightest doubt.

TRAIN HELD UP

At High Noon at the Southern Depot by Our Bold, Bad City Marshal.

Columbiana and her people have always borne an unusually good reputation for sobriety and morality, and of course we were not prepared to hear the startling news that a train had been held up within the incorporate limits of the city and that too at the hour of high noon. However, upon investigation, we found that it was unquestionably true, and that the city marshal was the principal participant, although strange as it may seem, he had the hearty co-operation and presence of our sedate and dignified mayor.

The train selected was the south bound local freight on the Southern, and the cause of the hold up was the failure of the Southern Railway company to pay the city taxes amounting to something over three hundred dollars. This all occurred on Monday while most of our citizens were partaking of their noon meal, totally ignorant of the scene being enacted at the depot. Marshal Evans had everything his own way with the train and crew for about an hour, while Mr. Calahan, the operator, kept the wires warm communicating with headquarters for instructions. Finally Marshal Evans took pity on the helpless corporation and allowed the train to proceed on its way, after reducing their load by leaving on seven box cars which he had run in on the side-track. They have been advertised and will be sold for the aforesaid city taxes unless the company plunks up the cash promptly.

Columbiana is no sardine and don't you forget it. Railroad corporations must respect her authority else the strong arm of Marshal Evans will hold them at bay at stated intervals.

Harpersville Echoes.

La grippe is here.

Farmers are at work in dead earnest.

J. N. Warren is going to move his saw mill to Harpersville.

Hon. E. S. Lyman, of Montevallo, was in town one day last week.

Mrs. Prescott, of Verbena, is visiting her brother S. J. Strook and family.

W. A. and Frank Gorman spent Saturday and Sunday with Harpersville friends.

H. G. Self is building him a dwelling at Vincent and expects to move to the same when completed.

The Colonel went over to Birmingham last week on professional business.

Captain Walthall has now moved back to his Harpersville farm, and to him and family we extend a cordial welcome.

Well, yes, times have improved wonderfully since McKinley's election, but in what way—why the "tother" way of course. Banks have failed, public works have shut down, confidence has abandoned, cotton has gone down and all hopes for better times during the next four years have gone. Yes, gone clean out of sight.

Dr. Welch, Sr., of Alpine, is visiting his daughter Mrs. E. V. Caldwell and will probably remain for some time. He had the misfortune to lose his dwelling house by fire a few nights ago, but fortunately most of the contents were saved.

I heard a farmer remark a few days ago that there was not enough corn in this country to do until May. Now in view of this fact will our farmers still pursue the same old plan—plant cotton and guano with the expectation of buying their corn, meat and flour?

Our townsman W. B. Hubbard was called to Weavers Station Monday by a telegram announcing the death of his mother. We extend to him our sympathies in his bereavement.

The Texas people have all gone home with the exception of Mrs. Elliott who will remain until spring.

Rev. Mr. Giles filled his regular appointment at the Baptist church Saturday but was rained out Sunday.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Calloute, Druggist, Beaversville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with La Grippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial at Parker & Armstrong's drug store.

"I see that a young wife has been arrested for putting Paris green into a pie which she had made for her husband." "Yes, I noticed it. It was very foolish of a young wife to use Paris green if she wanted to get rid of her husband." "Why?" "The pie itself ought to have been sufficient."

THE JAYVILLE JOSHER.

A Weekly Paper Published Just for Fun and Other Collateral.

The Josher editor received an invitation to a leap year ball given by the Jayville belles at the New Jerusalem Hotel on last Tuesday evening. It is a great thing to be an editor. It doesn't make any difference how feebly you shine in social life, you are bound to get asked to everything. Now, in our case, it is well known that we dance like a tame bear, and can leave a ball room about as gracefully as a cow. When we take our departure we are under the necessity of backing out the door in order to avoid having the seat of our pants scrutinized by people who are prone to make vulgar and cutting remarks. We have never yet subjected ourselves to the merited criticism that attends the wearing of a swallow-tail coat to a Jayville dance, and in order not to appear too stuck up and affluent, we have usually worn no coat at all. Therefore we are constantly under the necessity of being a wall flower. Our only pair of pants are a source of much pride to us, and we don't want them laughed at. We are willing to leave coats and collars to the younger generation who wish to appear effete. A Jayville dude is a sight that would make Fifth avenue, New York, get up on end and stare. He wears a seersucker coat that reaches almost to the top buttons of his pants, corduroy pants that fit like a fifth mortgage on a depleted estate, a celluloid collar that is an inch high and cracks like a firecracker when the dude moves his neck, a pair of cuffs, turned even as the worm, made of an improved celluloid that makes a fuss like rattling dice in a cigar box, a red cotton handkerchief that protrudes from the side pocket of his coat, and a dark, suspicious looking kerchief hangs gracefully from his hip pocket and flops about the room as he dances. A pair of boots with green tops, and a necktie made of pale blue calico, complete the outfit.

We attended this leap year ball without ostentation or the glare of greatness. We walked in quietly, just as the most ordinary man would do, and sat down on a sardine box behind the stove, where we had abundant opportunity of observing the animated scene within. And we want to state right here that while there were many pleasant and inspiring features connected with the affair, at the same time we saw some things that were painful to a sensitive soul like ours. If it was necessary for Bob Powers to drink rotten corn whiskey every three minutes out of a quart bottle, why couldn't he go out to the shed or somewhere and drink it, instead of sneaking into a corner of the ball room with his back to the crowd and turning the bottle up and raring himself back and soaking it in, as we saw him do? We noticed several ladies smile and nudge each other when they saw Bob taking his drink this way, and no doubt the performance was noticed by others. Towards the close of the dance, we are sorry to relate that Jim Snow became so hilarious that he began dancing with a young lady, and was unable to get his arm around her from the fact that he had a bottle swinging in one hand and a pistol in the other. He hopped around on one foot and yelled and laughed around the poor girl in a manner that was far from gentlemanly. When it came time to swing, the poor girl had to swing herself. Bob told us later that he was looking for trouble with his rival for the affections of the young lady, and he carried the pistol in his hand merely as a matter of caution. However that may be, we are bound to state that it looked a little bad. Old man Perrywinkle sat over in one corner of the room and smoked his old cob pipe in evident enjoyment of the scene. He soon had the room so full of smoke that you couldn't tell whether you were hugging the right girl or not. Horatio Morris was floor manager, and he very properly kicked the old man down stairs. A small row was precipitated by the sister of Billy Cumberland. Billy is not as popular as one would infer from his style of dress, and he soon relapsed into a wall flower, forgotten and unmourned. The girls didn't seem to half want to dance with him, and he sat back against the wall and looked sore as a pet corn. After awhile his sister, who is quite popular herself, and made every boy in the room dance with her, observed her brother sitting sad and lonely against the wall, and she got mad in a minute. She took Sue Jones out in an ante room and asked her why in thunder she hadn't danced some with her brother. She replied mildly that she had retired from floricultural pursuits, and would see her in Guinea first. Then Billy's sister made a pass at Sue's bangs and Sue scratched a big mole off of Billy's sister's face. The trouble might have been serious, but just then a pistol accidentally went off in the ball room and the lights went out. This closed the affair, and all went home well pleased with the enjoyments of the evening. The Jayville girls know how to do things as they should be did, and this occasion will add greatly to the laurels they already wear.

Our devil had his eyebrows shot off while fooling with a loaded snail one day last week. His eyes were very nearly closed forever, too. He never was noted for his facial beauty, but his appearance since that time is calculated to give a man the jimmies to look at him. The devil, no doubt felt that he had a right to monkey with powder as much as he wanted to, but his narrow escape from going up with the angels has made him more careful.

The Jayville Light Dragoons left last week for Cuba. As the train pulled out the band played: "When this Cruel War is Over." The boys say they will not come home until they have freed Cuba and hung Gen. Weyler.

Blessed is the man who lends us a dollar, for he shall be paid in heaven.

REMARKABLE RIVERS.

In Colombia is the Rio de Vinagre, which is so sour from the mixture of sulphuric acid that it is most appropriately called the Vinegar river.

In Algeria exists a small river which has been turned by the chemistry of nature into ink. It is formed by the union of two rivulets, one of which is strongly impregnated with iron, while the other flows through peat marshes and is heavily charged with gallic acid. Letters have been written with the wonderful ink compound formed by the union of gallic acid and iron.

One of the most curious streams that have ever come to the knowledge of men is the Webbe Shebeyi of eastern Africa, a deep and rapid stream abounding in strange fish and immense crocodiles. Although it flows for hundreds of miles through fertile lands it never reaches the sea. A short distance north of the equator the river is lost in a desert region a short way from the Indian ocean.

In South Africa the Orange river rises in the mountains which separate Natal from the Orange Free State. It is 1,000 miles long and its banks abound in rich, valuable woods, while around it are copper ores. In its waters are many varieties of fish, which are found until the river reaches a point where copper is prevalent and the water below there is poisonous, almost instantly fatal to any kind of fish.

Some of the recent explorers of Alaska say the Mississippi can no longer be regarded as the largest river on this continent, as they claim this distinction for the Yukon river. According to a man who spent two years in Alaska preparing facts for the last census the Yukon empties more water than the Mississippi pours into the Gulf of Mexico. Its basin comprises the northern half of Alaska and 600 miles from its mouth the river is a mile wide. Many centuries before it was discovered by white men it doubtless served as a highway into the interior for the tribes which we believe crossed over from Asia. The Yukon is over 2,000 miles long.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

To Get Out of the Way

When trouble is coming, is obviously the part of common sense. An obstruction of the bowels is a serious obstacle to health. To get this out of the way is an easy matter with the thorough laxative, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which, although it affords relief, never gripes and convulses like a drastic purgative. Dyspepsia, malarial, kidney and rheumatic ailments and nervousness yield to this genial family medicine.

QUAINT AND HOMELY.

Wit and Wisdom in the Rough from "Old Rocky."

The Loan and Borrow Habit—First New Year Lesson—Bunk Weatherford's Chastisement of His Crosscut Saw—Fresh and Scandalous News.

Some of the old poets or prophets or politicians—I can't recollect right now which one it was—spoke forth a great gob of truth and good advice when they said: "In orderment to be happy and let your days be many and peaceful in the land of your fathers, neither loan nor borrow." But to borrow is one thing and to loan is altogether something else. And I have got notice that many a man can break himself from the loan-and-borrow habit a blame sight more easier than he can wear other people. Now a man never will learn to live without he lives to learn, and I learnt my first New Year lesson from old man Bunk Weatherford—which you understand, the Weatherfords have sense and money and most every thing else exceptin' fits.

He Chastised the Crosscut Saw. It was on my return back from town New Year day that I rid around by the Weatherford place to change compliments and swap lies and tobacco with old man Bunk. Whilst I was there Jule Nabors he come begin up to the front gate with a crosscut saw on his shoulders. It would seem like old man Bunk had loaned his saw to Jule way back full, and from first one thing and then another Jule never could think to fetch it back home. Finally at last the old man had sent Jule word that he would love to borrow his own saw for a few days, and then Jule he fetched it home.

Old man Bunk made out like he was the proudest in the world to see Jule Nabors that day, and nothin would do but Jule must come right in and take a chair and be seated and change his breath with something a little more stronger than branch water. Well, of course, Jule was more than willin, and the old man soon had him feelin powerful welcome and famillious like.

And then what do you reckon? Old man Bunk got up and walked out to the front gate where the crosscut saw was leanin agin the palins. He shook his fist at the saw, and took it up and boxed its jaws two or three times. Then he went out to the orchard and cut him a good switch and came back and lit him on that saw. For the next three minits he didn't do a blamed blessed thing but give that old crosscut saw the all-overest beatin you ever heard tell of. And between the licks he likewise give the saw some plain United States talk.

"Run off from home and stayed six months, did you? I will learn you better than that if I have to knock every dern tooth you have got down your throat."

Then the switch burnt the wind, and you could hear the licks on that old saw for 200 yards around.

"Now, daburn you! The next time you git away from home maybe you will know the way back."

In the meantime I broke loose and laughed. I did mortally hate to do so and Jule right there, but it was laugh or bust and I didn't want to bust on the first day of the New Year. So I laughed.

Jule Nabors he turned red and white all over in spots, and looked like a man that was sent for and couldn't possibly come across.

When old man Bunk had tellerly wore his switch out on the saw he snatched it up and yanked it under the house, shook his double fist at it once more and remarked:

"Now stay there, daburn you, and the next time I let you go maybe you won't forget the road back home."

After that the old man cooled down and come in smilin all over himself, and henceforward he was as pleasant as a basket of chips to Jule and me. But Jule didn't tarry around and remain over much longer. He soon made up a good excuse and went off towards home.

Fresh News from Panther Creek. And who do you reckon come to see us on Saturday the first day after New Year? Who but Aunt Nancy Newton from Panther Creek. What did she bring in this way of Christmas and New Year gifts? Nothin much to speak of in that line. But she brung her dear delightful old self, her trunk bag and her pipe, and a large assortment of fresh and scandalous news from the old settlement.

Now as to me, I never did have no turn to keep up with what is goin on around amongst the people in general. It takes my level blandest to know what is comin to pass right around home, and I don't have to go a hencersch from the front gate to find more business than my muttonhead and lily-white hands can tend to. But when my Aunt Nancy comes and throws off her fly bonnet, and lights her pipe, and puts her feet to the fire, all I have got to do is to press the button and then lay low and let her do the rest.

"News I have got, Rufus, and news on top of news," says the dear old soul that night after supper. "Nobody sick or dead or gone crazy so far as I know, but everybody takin Christmas, and marryin and courtin and lallagaggin and goin on to beat Bobtail."

"You never would of thought, I know, but if left-handed Dunk Watson, and Dolly Wagner didn't sail in and get married the next day after Christmas, then Christmas didn't come at all and old Rufus, there is old man Dunk Watson, and big Dunk and little Dunk, and then, in orderment to know which from tother, there is left-handed Dunk, and he is the youngest which has put in all of a suddent to hangin his clothes on the same peg with Dolly Wagner."

"From general outside apperancements it would seem like Dunk and Dolly had worked up a right tolerable bad case amongst themselves way last spring—which about that time they went to school together over at Prosperity Hill. She is a right young thing, as you know, Rufus, and he ain't nothin but a boy if you go by the almanac and count up the years on 'em. But you know some people are backward which others are forced. If Dolly Wagner ain't a young woman now she never will be, and if left-handed Dunk Watson ain't a young man he is the worst fooled human in the settlement.

"Well, mother like—and woman like I reckon—the Widdler Wagner she raised a furious big rumpus when she found out that left-handed Dunk Watson was courtin and carryin on with her youngest daughter Dolly. She give Dunk his abscutlation papers on the spot, and told him if she ever caught him fiddlin and foolin and fumbalin around her house any more she would send up her majority report to the high sheriff and land him right slap kerdab in the county jail. Naturally of course after that the pore boy had to make himself as few and seldom as he could around the widdler's place, though I reckon no doubts Dunk and Dolly still managed to call a meetin of the committee once in a while."

When the Stormcloud Broke.

"But it was on Christmas day—which ought to be the brightest and most perfect day of the year—that the stormcloud broke and fell over at the Widdler Wagner's house." Aunt Nancy went on as she made a pass at the fireplace and spit in the wood box.

"After dinner that day the widdler had took her foot and hand and went forth to do a little Christmas visitation around amongst the neighbors. In the main time by some hook or mercock Dunk he got the news and drapped in to see his Dolly dear. Hit was sich a raw and blusterin day out of doors, and the meetin was so scandalous sweet and pleasant, as it were, till bless gracious Dunk and Dolly lost the schedule, and when the widdler got home the committee was still holdin forth in what you might call a secret session."

"But somebody that is too infernal good and smart to live—the Lord knows who it was, and I don't want to know—had already made reports to the widdler touchin the fact that Dunk had come to see Dolly, and when the old lady come in she come smokin hot and puffin and snortin like a steam engine. When the young folks heard the storm risin and roarin and comin their way, Dolly she took and hid Dunk in the closet where the old lady keeps her spinnin wheel and cotton and dried fruit and old clothes, and turned the button on the door."

"Well, the old lady come in, and then the stormcloud broke and fell. She threatened to whip Dolly in a inch of her life for keepin company with that good-for-nothin Dunk Watson. She pulled Dolly's ears and boxed her jaws till it was a plum disgrace on the female sex. And then, bless gracious, in her mad contentment, she slapped and pushed the pore girl into the closet, and slammed the door and turned the button, and told her she could stay right there till she learnt better sense than to play grown woman with a triflin upstart like left-handed Dunk Watson."

"Then presently the old lady she pulled off to bed and slept the sleep of the just as well as the unjust. Bright and early next mornin she come to remember that somebody had to cook breakfast and wash the dishes and milk the cows and feed the chickens and clean up the house. She needed Dolly. She went to the closet after Dolly. She found Dolly right where she had put her the night before, and that want all. She likewise found left-handed Dunk Watson there in the closet. The committee was still in session."

"Did the old lady turn herself loose and raise another tempestuous big storm? Not any to speak of. From that time henceforward she was as mild and mellow as an April shower, and as givly and gentle as a cat. She felt like one which had thrown her throw and lost."

"What did Dunk and Dolly do? Bless your soul, honey, they got married, they did, before the sun went down on that same wintry day. The widdler she paid for the license and sent for the preacher and was more than willin for Dunk and Dolly to proceed with the proceedings. They have all settled down now on the Wagner place—peaceful and happy as you ever saw—and left-handed Dunk will run the farm this year."

Our Andy Strikes a Snag.

"There is one little batch of news from the old settlement which I know you never would hear if I didn't come and tell you," says Aunt Nancy, as she laid her pipe on the shelf and turned her back to the fire. "Andy Lucas—your own dear Andy—was down in the old settlement one day last week on a horse swappin stampede, and he didn't do a blessed thing, Rufus, but back his fool self up agin a tremendous big snag."

"You know Drury Gilliam, Rufus, and you know Drury has been a monstrous wild and wicked man from the days of his youth up. But Drury tended the big distracted meetin over at Pilgrim's Rest last summer. There was a mighty outpour around there for a few days, and consequently Drury got religion and come over on the Lord's side. Since then his walk has been upright and perfect in the ten commandments, and he now feels called to be a preacher of the word."

"Well, it would seem like Andy Lucas never did hear about Drury's big turn right here lately. And then by measur in another man's corn in his own half bushel, he loved that Drury Gilliam must be goin crazy. He likewise had it in his remembrance that one stavin good horse and three of the finest young mules in the settlement had been lookin to Drury Gilliam for their corn and fodder. So Andy he saddled his swappin stock and come a billin down there thinkin he could take the pick of Drury's lot and do his own tradin."

"Well, Drury he laid low and let the other man do all the talkin and tradin, but when Andy Lucas got away from there he had the very socks swappin off of him. He left a good plug of a mule in Drury's lot and rid off on a little Mountain mare which goes blind with every change of the moon, will kick at her own shadow by moonlight and would rather die than to pull a pound, single or double."

"Drury Gilliam might have religion. I hope he has got it, and a gracious plenty of it. Drury Gilliam might turn out to be a preacher. I raley hope he will and make a good one. But Drury Gilliam ain't gone crazy as yet. If you don't believe me you can go and ask Andy Lucas." RUFUS SANDERS.

MONSTER PIT IN CHICAGO.

One Whole Block Is 175 Feet Below the Street Level.

Chicago, the city of tall buildings and dizzy flights of architecture, has also something of a subterranean exhibit. Out on the southwest side there is a tract of land, extending over an entire block, that is something more than 175 feet below the adjoining streets.

This means that were the Ashland block set down in this huge hole the highest point of the building would come scarcely 25 feet above the street. Down at the bottom of this pit works a little army of men, who, when viewed from the surface, resemble so many overgrown ants. Above them on all sides tower limestone cliffs, straight and rugged, with here and there a protruding ledge or rocky shelf. On one side runs a steep track, up which the stone men are shoveling, picking and blasting is carried. But the only way out for the men is by a long, rickety stairs, for the cable that pulls up the cars sometimes breaks and then the car, amid a shower of flying rocks, dashes down the incline to be smashed to fragments at the bottom.

The quarry, one of the oldest and the deepest in Chicago, runs along Eighteenth street, near Lincoln. Just east of it is another pit, equally expansive, but not so deep. Thirty-nine years ago the first bit of excavation was begun. At that time untenanted prairie stretched on all sides and the city limits are even farther away, but they are on the other side of the quarry and around about it are busy thoroughfares, with their electric cars, huge manufacturing plants and dwellings innumerable.

The place is surrounded by a close board fence, so that nothing of the pit can be seen from the street, and comparatively few Chicagoans know of the existence of such a place. But during the year of the world's fair visitors from all parts of the country and people from many foreign countries visited the place. A party of the grandes of Spain, who came in the train of the duke of Veragua, walked down the creaky wooden stairway and admired the rugged grandeur of the dingy masses of limestone above them. Men who had crossed the Rocky mountains to visit Chicago said when taken into the pit that they had never seen the like before and marveled that such a scene, which is really mountainous in its aspect when viewed from below, should be found in a busy, bustling city on the prairie.

During the many years this quarry has been in operation accidents of a more or less serious nature have occasionally occurred. Sometimes a blast, stronger than usual, has scattered fragments of rocks among the workmen, killing some and maiming others. A careless workman hacking away at a ledge will sometime get caught and buried beneath a shower of rocks that he has hacked loose. Once, several years ago, a cart of stone to which two horses and two mules were hitched fell from the surface to a ledge of rock 100 feet below. The animals were hauling the stone away from the edge of the pit. It was up grade and they stopped for a moment to rest. No sooner had they done so than the cart, with its heavy load, started backward, pulling the animals with it. All efforts to stop it were vain. With increasing speed it approached the edge and then plunged over, a flying, struggling mass of stone, cart and animals. The cart was smashed in pieces, the two horses and one of the mules killed outright. But the remaining mule, after recovering the breath which had been knocked out of it, picked itself up and started browsing around among some stray weeds that were growing there. This animal was apparently little injured by the tumble and lived to do several more days' work in the quarry.

One of the most picturesque figures about the pit is Dick Crosby, the old quarry foreman. For more than 23 years he has worked in this little underground patch of Chicago, and he is come to be looked upon as a fixture. Down below ground he is monarch of all he surveys; but his loneliness is all he suffers; there are 14 nationalities working in the quarry he is the only Irishman in the lot, and right from Limerick, at that.—Chicago News.

LOST HER ROYAL DIGNITY.

Mother of the Emperor of China Dies in Fit of Rage.

Many causes have been mentioned as responsible for the death of the mother of the emperor of China. It is now reported that she succumbed to a fit of angry rage. The North China Herald says that the old lady became furious with rage at the behavior toward her on the part of her sister, the widow of the late emperor. The two ladies had some trouble before, because the latter had taken the liberty to reprove the mother of the emperor for staying too long in the imperial gardens.

The difficulty became still more pronounced when the widow of the late emperor deprived the emperor's mother of the costly litter which she was in the habit of using on her excursions to the imperial gardens.

The emperor's mother was thereby compelled to return to the imperial gardens outside of the city to the palace in an ordinary hired conveyance. This indignity was too much for the worthy mother of the emperor. She became highly excited, then delirious, and in her fit of anger succumbed to a fit of apoplexy, which proved fatal. Another version has it that she committed suicide for shame at the indignities heaped upon her.

Whatever may have been the real cause of her death, the young emperor of the "Kingdom of Heaven" was so embittered that for several days he walked his rooms like a lion in his cage, so that the mandarins were afraid to approach their imperial lord and master.—Chicago Tribune.

Census in Russia.

An exceptionally interesting census will be that which is to be taken throughout the Russian empire in January next. It is now nearly 40 years since the last general census was taken in that empire. There have been in that time vast additions of territory, and a great increase of population, but how great the latter has been can be merely estimated. No one knows positively within many millions.—N. Y. Tribune.

OXYGEN AS A HEALING POWER.

Several Valuable Experiments Performed in Recent Years.

During the Zulu war Dr. George Stoker, who served during the campaign as an army surgeon, had an opportunity of observing the method in which the natives treated their wounded comrades. He noticed that they carried them to the highest point attainable, and there exposed the wounds to the purest air and the action of pure water. This simple remedy was swift and sure, the worst cases yielding rapidly under its influence, doubtless the healthy state of the blood and the abstemious lives led by the natives having a good deal to do with the matter. Dr. Stoker was led to believe that the oxygen cure might be applied to ulcers, burns and wounds of a similar nature, and on his return to this country he made several experiments on such cases, and the more he saw of it the firmer was his belief in his discovery. Bacteria consist of two kinds, the harmful micro-organisms and those necessary to the system, in order that the mechanism of the body may be carried on satisfactorily. Before the discovery of antiseptic surgery the risk which was run wherever a raw surface was exposed to the air was enormous, but with the introduction of antiseptics into the treatment the danger was reduced to a minimum. Iodoforn has always been the special medium for use in the case of ulcers, and it is not a pleasant one, but it tended to hold the bacteria at bay. Now, however, it has been noticed that in cases where oxygen has been applied and where the wound is healing the progress was marked by the presence of common organisms, and that, if a relapse occurred, the bacteria disappeared, so that one is led to the conclusion that a certain number of these living organisms are necessary in the formation of new and healthy flesh.

In the spring of this year it was decided to enter upon a wider field of operations, and test this experiment further, for it must be borne in mind that as yet it is only an experiment, and accordingly a committee of ladies and gentlemen, under the presidency of Baroness Burdett-Coutts, undertook to establish a hospital at No. 35 St. George's square, S. W. The hospital is small, but if funds were forthcoming a larger house could be secured. The oxygen used is said to be first generated in an iron funnel, and thence it is pumped into india rubber bags, according to the strength required; the part affected is then inclosed in a wooden box, with a glass lid, and cased round with oilskin; a tube communicates with the box and the bag, and in this way the oxygen is introduced into the box. Other apparatus are contrived for the back, head and other parts of the body. The first effect is the cessation of pain, and the healing properties are quickly discerned. One case of an ulcer of 40 years' standing had yielded to the treatment in three weeks, another of 18 years in an equally short time, and many others had a similar tale to tell. Not one of the least of the virtues of the oxygen is its deodorizing power. It has also been tried on cases of baldness with the result that the hair grew rapidly, and in a short time was in a normal condition. To what length the curative properties of oxygen may be carried remains to be proved, but it has at least one advantage, that of extreme economy, for, beyond the cost of the oxygen, which, it is said, comes to about 2½d. for 24 hours, there is no expense for dressings or medicines.—British Sanitary Record.

TORN BY AVALANCHES.

Climbing Mount Tacoma Is More Dangerous Than Ever.

Great changes have taken place around the base of Mount Tacoma this year, notably among which are the widening of crevasses, the breaking away of several big ledges of rock heretofore crossed in making the ascent and the enlargement of mountain streams as a result of snowfields extending a mile further down the mountain side than usual. Terrific avalanches have thundered down the mountain, carrying destruction before them.

Recently a large Tacoma party came very near being swept away by one. The party included Judge Dillon, Prof. Dewey, Olof Bull, Robert Newell, Messrs. Wood and John. They were half way around Gibraltar rock, at an altitude of about 1,000 feet, when a deafening noise was heard. The next moment a tremendous avalanche dropped down the edge of the frozen mass, being only a few hundred feet away. It seemed as though the mountain was tumbling down bodily. Investigation showed that an ice mass 300 feet long, 150 feet wide and 200 feet thick, estimated to weigh 250,000 tons, had fallen over a mile into the Nisqually glacier.

Undaunted, the climbers kept on. They found that a ledge of rock known as the "Camp of the Stars," on the east side of "Gibraltar," had fallen off into the crevasses. On the south side another big piece of Gibraltar has fallen, leaving only a narrow ledge, so that climbers must use ropes stretched from rocks at either end. Most climbers must now spend the night at Camp Misery, near the top. This consists of a rock ledge six feet wide and nine feet long, protected by a reef ten feet high. Frequently six or ten campers sleep, or try to sleep, here, the rocks protecting them somewhat from the mountain winds, which have a velocity of 60 to 80 miles an hour. After spending the night here the campers press on early in the morning, and on reaching the craters, breakfast is prepared by making soup and coffee over steam jets issuing from the interior.

The increased width of crevasses has made climbing more dangerous than ever. A compensating feature is the fact that mountain goats are becoming more plentiful.

Two streams instead of one now issues from the Nisqually glacier, and a side stream has cut into the glacier an ice tunnel 500 feet long, through which climbers can pass.—San Francisco Chronicle.

A War Cloud in the Smoke.

"The Canadian authorities arrested three Americans last week for fishing in Canadian waters. But we are even with them now."

"How?"

"Why, a party of Canadians went hunting the other day up in their old dominion, crossed the line into this country by a mistake, and were promptly arrested by the Chicago police for firing guns within the city limits."—Up-to-Date.

WHEELS AND RIDERS.

All New England railroads have agreed to abolish the "release" which has heretofore been required by the passenger shipping his bicycle.

Johnson and Michael find that skipping the rope is one of the best devices for strengthening their lung power and developing the muscles of their legs.

The interest taken in cycling at the various colleges promises well for intercollegiate racing next season. Considerable indoor training will be done during the winter. Columbian College now holds the championship, such as it is.

An electric bicycle lamp is on the market, and it is claimed that the light costs but two cents a night. It is an ugly-looking affair, and creates surprise that the makers did not turn out something more attractive, but no doubt it will be rapidly improved.

Arthur Zimmerman, who was the champion bicycle rider until he retired two years ago, has intimated that he will return to the track. Considerable curiosity is being shown in regard to his standing, in comparison with the younger idlers, like Bald, Cooper, Gardiner and Sanger, and many think that he cannot hold his own in the present fast company. Yet the majority believe that he will not only hold his own, but that at the end of next season he will again be champion.

An automatic bicycle pump, attached permanently to the tire, is the latest invention to make the wheelman's life still happier. It consists of a cylinder secured to the inner face of the tire, tubular parts provided with internal screw-threads that engage external threads on the cylinder and a tubular piston arranged to slide in the cylinder. By means of valves the admission of air to, and the passage of air from, the cylinder is governed. It is claimed that this pump will keep the tires properly inflated with air, without any aid from the rider.

Very high prices are set upon errors. A few United States 15 cents and 24 cents of 1869 with inverted centers got into circulation, and are now valued at $100. In the Mauritius 1848 2d blue, the first impression read "pence," instead of "pence," and this error has been sufficient to inflate their value to $50, whereas those without the error are valued at $25.

A WRITER in the Birmingham State Herald says the State University is run in too high a scale for the young men who are sons of people in moderate circumstances. "Dances, football, baseball and the like should be relegated to the rear," he says. "The poor boy should not be made to realize his poverty by the indulgence of those students who are better off."

BRIGHTER TIMES AHEAD.

Rev. Dr. H. Allen Tupper sends the following timely reflections to the Baltimore Sun:

What a mistake, from every point of view, for our people and papers to continue to harp on "the hard times!" I am just back from a trip through the East, and, if all signs do not fail, we are soon to enter upon an era of great prosperity, despite the chronic grumbler and the despondent pessimist. The statement is made that there is in the banks of New York city about $165,000,000 of uninvested money—$57,000,000 of which is in excess of the legal reserve. The balance of trade, with other countries in our favor the past year aggregates the magnificent sum of $179,128,000, most of which must soon find investment here in America. Today there is a larger amount of unemployed money in our land than ever before, perhaps, in the history of our republic, and the employment of these millions, which cannot be delayed long, must inevitably brighten the commercial sky. The hammering of the Wall street bears is becoming feebler and feebler, and more cheering sounds are in the air. Let us quit our dark forebodings. Ours is the richest and greatest land under the canopy of the sky; Heaven's cornucopia is pouring upon us boundless mercies; the shadows of war, famine and pestilence that cast gloom elsewhere do not darken our shores; the bitter experiences of the laborer in the East are unknown in the West; what are known here as necessities among the classes of our people would be regarded as luxuries in other lands and prosperity, in its best sense, is more generally diffused in America than anywhere on earth. We have played the spoiled baby about long enough. Let us appreciate our God-given advantages, and gratefully, hopefully turn our faces toward a future that is spanned with the radiant rainbow of precious promises!

RESOLVED, by the democratic state executive committee of Alabama, That we hereby cordially invite all conservative voters, irrespective of past political associations, or differences, who can unite with us in the effort for pure and economical and constitutional government; and who will support the nominees and principles of the democratic party, to participate in the primaries of the party throughout the state.

RESOLVED, further, That all persons so participating in the primaries, conventions or mass meetings of the party hereafter to be held, thereby pledge themselves to support the nominees of such primaries, conventions or mass meetings, whether municipal, county, state or federal.

RESOLVED, further, That it shall be competent for the local executive committee of each county to determine whether any other than white voters shall be allowed to participate in said primaries.

The meeting was an executive session, and only the result of the deliberations was made known.

GENERAL LEE'S REBUKE.

His Supremacy Over Sectional Feeling After the War.

From the Washington Times.

General Lee, in October, 1895, accepted the presidency of Washington college, at Lexington, Va., at a salary of $1,500 a year. He had been previously offered the position of president of the National Express Company organized by capitalists in New York, at a salary of $50,000 a year, and although very poor in purse, he decided, as he always did, to follow what he deemed the line of his duty, and devote the remainder of his life to the education of youth. He wielded his vast influence in the south to soften the asperities that every spring from civil war, and to promote among his people a spirit of national fraternity. In the period of political business, engendered by party strife under the reconstruction act of congress, several professors in his college, while in a large company of ladies and gentlemen, denounced the government of the United States in his presence, and he reproved their harsh strictures by reciting the following lines written by the Persian poet Hafiz:

"Learn from your Orient shell to love thy foe,
And store with pearls the hand that brings thee woe.
Free, like you rock, from base vindictive pride,
Emblaze with gems the wrist that rends thy side."

After reciting these beautiful lines in a clear voice and deep feeling, General Lee added: "Ought not we, who professed to be governed by the principles of Christianity, to rise at least to the standard of this Mohammedan poet, and learn to forgive our enemies?"

There is an old gentleman named Whittaker, living in Geneva county, who has enjoyed something of a novel experience in a way. He has lived in the same place and used water from the same well for over fifty years, yet in that time he has been a citizen of two states and four different counties. At first he voted and paid taxes in Jackson county, Fla., then a readjustment of county lines showed that he was in Holmes county, to which his duties as a citizen were transferred. Later a survey of the boundary line between Alabama and Florida showed Mr. Whittaker that he was an Alabamian and a resident of Dale county, in which he continued until Geneva county was created where he found himself a citizen of that county. He has emigrated a good deal to be using the same well all the time.—Troy Messenger.

Peculiar World.

From the Baldwin Times.

This is a peculiar world, says an exchange. One man is saving money to build a house, and another is trying to sell his for less than it cost to build it. One man is spending all he makes in taking a girl buggy riding and to entertainments with the hope of making her his wife, while his neighbor is using what money he has in getting a divorce. One man escapes with diseases flesh is held to, and gets killed on a railroad. Another escapes with only scratches, and dies with the whooping cough. One man stands off his creditors and goes traveling to the springs while another stays at home and pays his debts.

THE JAYVILLE JOSHER.

A Weekly Paper Published Just for Fun and Other Collateral.

The grip has attacked us in a very cowardly manner lately. It came up behind us while we were writing some scathing remarks to our family physician regarding an overcharge of ten cents in his last bill rendered, and gave us a swat in the diaphragm and made each separate bone of us stand up and ache and ache.

We have been thrown from the hurricane deck of the bounding broncho; we have gambolled playfully on our left ear amid the wrecks of safety bicycles; we have felt the glad sunlight exploring the antechambers of our internal improvements behind the red-hot right-of-way of the S. & W. express; we have been mangled beyond repair in railway disasters; we have stood up in our shirt sleeves and fought hand to hand battles with railroad eating house pigs we have been run over by street cars and mother-in-law—but the grip has a pathos and a pain that merges all human ills into one compressed and indefatigable chunk.

We have been a proud and haughty man from earliest childhood. We scorned disease and laughed at Fate. Fate always seemed a joke with us. Whenever Fate began to reach down in his bag for a doubtful prize, we always said: "Lay on, McDuff, and damned be he who first cries, 'hold, enough!'" We never could hold enough. But when Fate met us at a Sunday school convention last week and dished up his grip microbe from his grip and incorporated it into the rudiments of pseudo-oyster soup, he had us foul. We have been hasty in our opinion of Fate. You may dodge his shots for a long time and get proud and stuck up as a cross-eyed woman with a prize baby, but you will have to get behind a bigger barn than your own conceit to keep him from bringing you down after awhile.

The grip is, comparatively, a new disease. Our forefathers left their grip at home when they came over, and the thing has been sent over by express lately. C. O. D. (meaning, "Come on, Doctor").

The effect of the grip on us was surprising and even shocking. There was a universal, ever-present ache, attended by smaller assistant aches that did special field work. While the big ache was doing a wholesale business all over our system, it had branch offices scattered about to catch the country trade. About the time we were becoming reconciled to the general disturbance, an insurrection would break out in the principalities with a suddenness and vigor that doubled up our mortal frame like a jack-knife. Our feelings were as various as the charms of Cleopatra. At one moment it seemed that a yoke of oxen were hauling a log wagon across our abdomen, and in the next we seemed to be plunged into a hot bath while the doctor gently ironed our spinal column with a piece of ice.

The grip has toned down the wild untraveled freedom we used to boast of. It has taken away our arrogance and corporosity. It has created a doubt as to our oft-boasted prowess. It has conquered our proud spirit and rolled it in the dust. No longer do we scorn the ravages of wind and sight drafts. We are humble and meek. We haven't enough courage left to dun a delinquent subscriber.

The fair young gazelle who jerks the bed clothes into the delicious hence, and brushes the dust of centuries from the whatnot, who stands flat-footed and mashes the bolster right in the feather-basket, and hauls defiance at the kindling wood—this gentle creature whom once we looked in the eye and quelled, now casts her glorious orbs upon us sullenly and gives the harsh command: "Git up, will yer?"

We do.

Jawbone Lewis and Rory O'Smoke had a spirited discussion on the public square Monday morning about ten o'clock.

These two men had been rivals for some time for the position of dog-catcher of Beat 11, and in the heat of the campaign many harsh things were said on both sides. The election passed off, however, without hoodshed and Rory was declared elected by a majority of 2. He was duly inducted into office, and no one has impeached his conduct in any manner whatever. It seemed to be one case where the office sought the man and the man sought the office. Still, beneath the quiet exterior, it was known to those on the inside that Jawbone cherished bitter feelings against his successful rival and was on the watch for a chance to get even.

The opportunity came Saturday evening when Rory found Jawbone's rawbone, long-yearred, yaller hound, "Boss," prowling around in Beat 11 without his collar and cravat on. Now, every respectable dog is supposed to give at least this much attention to his toilet; he may leave of his pants if he so desires, but the canine etiquette of Beat 11 won't admit a dog into the best circles unless he wears a collar. Rory, being a fearless officer of the law, immediately arrested Boss and took him to the pound, where the lady members of his set could not see the sad deficiency in his attire.

Rory knew the dog belonged to Jawbone, but he must do his duty and uphold the dignity of his high office. Boss stayed in the pound all day Sunday and until Monday afternoon, when he was taken out and duly executed, without being allowed to attend divine service the day before. Boss's execution, however, seemed timely, and no doubt saved the animal much grief, from the fact that the spiritual discussion mentioned above, brought Jawbone's earthly career to a full stop and a paragraph. The debate was brief, but full of fire. Jawbone received a consignment of warm buttered bread, and immediately went to the well.

Rory has agreed to give the widow another dog.

The farmers are now ready to receive their usual supply of Spring advice. At a great expense the Josher has secured three earloads of the raw material, and it is being worked into the proper shape for distribution. No newspaper can hope to succeed without having its own farmers' advice plant. Realizing this, the Josher has thus early arranged to meet every requirement in that line, and is prepared to turn out a better quality of advice than ever before. The for-man of the advice department is an experienced man and personally supervises all advice that is turned out. If an operative passes over to him a piece of advice that is too short or too crooked or hasn't the requisite number of frills on it, he is immediately made to take his own advice. This makes the operatives very careful, indeed.

Our advice is cut on the bias in some cases, V-shaped in others, decollette, bloomer or ordinary ante-deluvian style to suit the taste of all. The vast army of farmers who are anxiously awaiting their prorata of advice should subscribe for the Josher without delay. With this great family paper always at hand the farmer may take things easy and the advice will do the rest. These farmers, however, who are doing the rest on their own personal recognizance, will find our advice superfluous.

A book agent came to Jayville last week. He had heard that we were here. By the way, we can't understand why it is, but an editor seems to be the legitimate prey of book agents and green goods men. Since taking up our end of the social fabric in the way of journalism we have received more attention from these classes than any other man in town. If a man wants to give away great gobs of spurious currency "just as good as the genuine" for a small roll of the "regular," he can just pick us right out in the biggest sort of a crowd, and beg us as a friend to "get into this." If there is any old spavined, transparent, aged and infirm horse-bones in our neighborhood, we are the man selected as the "good thing" to be shoved along.

And the book agents spot us with both eyes shut. And how pleasant it is to gaze into his soulful eyes and listen to his spontaneous eloquence, as he turns over the leaves of "The Life and Remarks of General Grant," as his glances wander about over the office, lighting anon upon the bell-box, the paper cutter or the oil can! He reminds us of a phonograph blazing away with its little speech, and all the time its mind is far, far away.

We listened to this book agent in awed silence until time to go to supper; then we arose and glanced wearily at him, said: "Sir, what did you say? I'm sorter hard of hearing." That infernal book agent never flinched. He just smiled and started his three-hour speech all over again, in a louder voice, and yet so gentle and patient that we were rebuked. We stopped him.

"Such perseverance, my dear sir, must not go unrewarded. Just write out a list of the books that you want me to buy, and come up in the morning. I'll take 'em."

ST. PAUL'S ROCKS.

A Submarine Mountain in the Middle of the Atlantic Ocean.

Almost at the very center of the Atlantic ocean—only a trifle north of the equator and about half way between South America and Africa—is a mountain so high that, in spite of the immense depth of the sea, it thrusts its peak 70 feet above the waves. This peak, startling from its position, forms a labyrinth of islets, the whole not over half a mile in circumference, known as St. Paul's rocks. So steep is the mountain, of which this lonely resting place of sea birds is the summit, that one mile from these rocks a 530 fathom line with which soundings were attempted by Ross on his voyage to the Antarctic failed to touch bottom.

Were the bed of the sea to be suddenly elevated to a level with the dry land, St. Paul's rocks would be the cloud capped peak of a mountain rising in sheer ascent in the midst of a broad plain. They are supposed to have been formed by the same disturbance of nature which separated the Cape Verde islands from Africa.

Treacherous currents make navigation in the vicinity of these rocks dangerous. A Brazilian naval officer, who passed them on an English steamer, tells me that the evening before they expected to sight them he was told by the captain that at 5 o'clock in the morning they would appear about five miles west. At that hour the officer went on deck and looked to the westward—nothing but an expanse of heaving sea. He chanced to turn, and there, five miles to the eastward were—the rocks. The currents had, in less than 12 hours, carried a full powered steamer ten miles out of her course.—Gustav Kobbé in St. Nicholas.

NEW SILVER CERTIFICATES.

Will Bear Vignettes of C. H. McCormick and Eli Whitney.

The last silver certificate likely to be turned out by the present administration is of the $10 denomination, the plates for which are now being prepared at the bureau of engraving and printing.

On the face of the note will be representations of implements and products of agriculture, the intention being to make this new note as picturesque as the denominations which have preceded it—ones, twos and fives. For the reverse, on a green ground, will be vignettes made from busts of C. H. McCormick, of reaper fame, and Whitney, the inventor of the cotton gin. It will be a radical departure from the plan heretofore in vogue—that of taking private individuals instead of officials of the government for the ornamentation of notes issued by Uncle Sam.

It is not expected that these new notes will be ready for circulation for a couple of months at least, and they may be deferred until a few days before the inauguration of President McKinley.

There is a law upon the statute books which prohibits the use of the portrait of any living person upon treasury notes, but there is never any difficulty about getting portraits of distinguished men, as a complete file of eminent Americans is kept always on hand for use when it can be done without infringing upon the law.

Jasper Holcomb who claimed to be elected treasurer of the city of Calera brought statutory proceedings against H. C. Moss before Judge Brewer for books and papers of office of treasurer. Judge Brewer granted his petition and placed an order in the hands of the sheriff to put Moss in jail until he delivered books, etc. Upon being arrested Moss sued out a writ of habeas corpus before Judge McMillan last Thursday and was discharged. After being discharged Sheriff Vest re-arrested him under same order, being instructed to do so by Judge Brewer by a telegram. The party who had some notes (which were described in Judge Brewer's orders) then turned them over to Holcomb with the other papers after which Moss was discharged. The Chronicle understands that Sheriff Vest and Judge Brewer will be arrested under affidavits for re-arresting Moss on same order, after he was discharged under writ of habeas corpus by Judge McMillan. Also that Vest will be arrested for assault and battery and will be sued for damages. The books and papers turned over to Holcomb.

Mr. and Mrs. Sim Shaw, of Weldon, spent Saturday and Sunday in We Two's communities.

Mr. Editor.—We know you shed a silent tear of grief (or perhaps relief) when we fall to write but really we are not to be blamed, for—if you will accept this newly coined expression—"news are as scarce as hens' teeth." Too, happenings and doings can be likened unto angels visits, i. e. few and far between. They say "necessity is the mother of invention" but we are not and never were of an inventive turn of mind, so you see, we can't invent news.

By the way, We Two made a mistake which should be rectified. Walter Riddle was cutting cross ties not through necessity or on account of hard times, but for his health.

Harpersville Echoes.

E. V. Caldwell made Birmingham a business trip one day last week.

Died, on the 24th inst., infant child of Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Weathers.

Miss Mattie Kidd is teaching school at Cobb, seven miles west of here.

The first quarterly meeting of this circuit will be held at Vincent next Saturday and Sunday.

It rains, it sleets, it snows and it is the coldest kind of weather.

Rev. Mr. Roberts filled his appointment at the Methodist church Sunday, and took for his subject the "Methodist Discipline," and according to his argument no church member of any denomination can be a whiskey drinker, dancer, card player, horse-trader and be a true Christian. Long may he live to expound the Gospel. And we hope that such serious will do much and lasting good.

They do say that Prof. C. H. Florey is the happiest man from Maine to California, and why, all because his wife came last week. This is no doubt news to his many friends that he has a wife, but it is so as "shore as you are burned" and how, and when did this all happen? Just listen. In the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety six, and in the twelfth month of that year and on the 26th day of that month, professor, boarded the south bound train and went down to Womack Hill, Ala., and on the 30th of the above named month was married to Miss Elliott, a charming young lady of Womack Hill. They got ready to start home on Friday when the bride's mother was taken very sick, so very sick that Mrs. Florey remained over several days, while the professor came on to be at the re-opening of his school at Vincent on the following Monday. Mrs. Elliott improved so much that Mrs. Florey came to join her husband last week. Prof. Florey grew very restless and impatient before the arrival of his wife, but seemed to console himself with the thought that no one else could marry her. Mar. Heaven's richest blessing attend them both through life is our wish and the wish of the professor's many friends in and around Harpersville.

JAKE.

SHE HAD IT.

The Woman Lawyer Insisted on Her Right and the Judge Granted It.

The following from the New York Herald is pertinent just at this time, and we commend it to the attention of our lawmakers at Montgomery:

The woman lawyer slammed a pile of briefs down before the judge and said:

"I move to discharge this prisoner, on the ground that the prosecution have not proved their case and that the evidence is irrelevant and immaterial."

"Motion granted," said the judge.

"No more dastardly outrage was ever perpetrated," began the lawyer, "than the incarceration of this, my innocent client. He was engaged in the pursuit of his daily vocation when the strong arm of the law descended upon him. He—"

"Madam," said the judge, "have I not already told you that your motion was granted? The prisoner is discharged."

"He was a man without guile," continued the fair counsel. "He supported his family as best he could. He was in the midst of his family circle when a minion of the law entered and demanded his immediate incarceration."

"I have already decided in your favor, madam, as I have told you twice," drawled the judge. "What more do you want?"

"What more do I want, indeed?" cried the woman lawyer, her face flushing to a crimson hue. "Why I want to argue this case. I stand upon my constitutional right as a woman to have the last word, and I mean to have it."

And she did.

It is a whole day's task for two men to fell a mahogany tree. On account of the spurs which project from the base of the trunk a scaffold has to be erected and the tree cut off above the spurs, leaving thus a stump of the very best wood from 10 to 15 feet high.

Sooner or later every great thought will make its way around the world.—Ram's Horn.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O. Sold by Druggists, 75c. Hall's Family Pills are the best.

RUFUS SANDERS.
With a Batch of Short Stories from the People.

Bunk Weatherford Takes a Day Off to Use "Proper and Appropriate Language"—"Courtn" and "Gallin" Under Difficulties.

Hit would be a whole lot more likely and easier for a blind steer to pass through a barbed wire fence without a scratch than for me to pass through the winter holidays without a fresh recollection of Uncle Josiah Jernigan's Christmas blessing. That was many years ago. Uncle Josiah was then in the primin of life, and in the flesh he held as much plain American devilment as any man I have ever saw—white or black, livin or dead.

A Christmas Blessing.
One cold Christmas day a gang of us boys had went over to eat turkey dinner with Uncle Josiah and his dear, delightful old wife, Aunt Fiddy Ann. And when the table was spread, by gum, it did look to me like they had the gone-byest biggest layout of good things I had ever saw since the day and hour when I opened my eyes for the first time on the wonders of the world. The salt water naturally backed up in my mouth as I waited for Uncle Josiah to ask the blessing, and this is what he said: "Whereas, some people have got plenty of appetite and no turkey, whilst other people have got the turkey and no appetite, we thank Thee, oh Lord, that on Christmas day in the Rocky Creek settlement we have got the appetite and the turkey both."

Bunk Weatherford's Day Off.
Old man Bunk Weatherford took a day off week before last in orderment to give out his private and public opinions in regards to the last election in "proper and appropriate language."

For the past 40 years or more old man Bunk has been what you might call an Amen corner member of the church. Over at Bark Log. His daily walk has been upright and faithful in the ten commandments, and as it were, and from long sufferings and works met for repentance he had come to be the mainest pillar of the church.

But long in the durlin of the last campaign the old man branched out into politics considerable. He was a screamin democrat and one of the most craziest sixteen to one free silver men in the whole discovered country. His great big old heart was jest naturally and literally bound up with Bryan for president and the glorious cause of free silver at sixteen to one. He didn't see how the democrats could keep from whippin that fight, hands down, and it was a long time after the election before he ever would sorter half way believe that when the old cat bunched her fat she jumped the other way. But finally at last after the horse mails all come in and everybody else had given up the fight, the old man found out for certain that the white plume of Bryan and the great cause of free silver at sixteen to one had gone down in the dust of disaster and defeat. It was on a circus day in town—on Wednesday of the week before last—when the head of the Weatherford family give up his last hope for the western man and the white metal. And they tell me that whilst the band played Annie Laurie that dear old man bowed his head on his chin whiskers and wept great gobs of grief.

The very next day—which was on a Thursday—old man Bunk went around amongst the brethren and called for a church meetin over at Bark Log. When the meetin come to order he called for his letters and got his name scratched off of the church book. And then from what the boys tell me the old man went forth durin the next 24 hours and pitched in and cussed out American politicians and all creation in general from Dan even unto Habbersham, and from Cape Cod to Kalamazoo.

Then the next day—which was on a Saturday and reglar meetin day at Bark Log—old man Bunk made his acknowledgments and "fessed up" to the church, put in his letters and got his name on the book once more.

You can see wherein old man Bunk was as honest as the sunshine with the church. With him it was a plain case of pusheney and I reckon about the best that he could do was to take a day off in orderment to give out his opinions in proper and appropriate language.

Rumblings and Rumors of War.
Dave Peeples and his old lady come by our house one day last week, and soon as they driv up to the gate in a covered wagon I could tell from general appearances that they had put out to move their washin.

"Looks to me like you mought be goin some wheres, Dave," says I.

"You have plugged the bull's-eye with the first shot, Rufe," says he, "but darned if I could tell you for certain where we are goin. Most any old place will do me now, Rufe. Maj. Turner has been readin of the newspapers to me considerable here lately, and the rumblings and rumors of war are comin too infernal close to suit Dave Peeples. The war has broke loose over in Cuba, and from all I can hear, comin and gwine, they have already got into two or three tremendous bad shootin matches over there. Hit looks to me powerful like the thing is comin this way, Rufe, and consequently I loved it mought be a very good time of year for a man by the name of Dave Peeples to pack up and shell out.

"The blamdest biggest fool in this world is a man that don't learn somethin' whilst he lives—that don't take some lessons from old Lady Experience. I learnt somethin about 30 years ago, Rufe, which I never can disremember. I learnt that I mean fightin and fightin meant killin. You must recollect that I fit plum through one war—all the way from Bull Run to the apple tree—and dum my cats if I ain't for the old flag and peace on earth henceforward and forever more.

"Keep in remembrance, Rufe, that I buried one arm up there at Bull Run," says Dave as he shook his empty coat sleeve at me, "and then I got one leg shot off in the little scrap we had around there in the neighborhood of Good Hope church. I fit the fight as best I could, Rufe, but when finally at last the boys stacked arms at Appomattox your Uncle Dave took out and quit for good and all. We were now movin off somewhere—most anywhere, Rufe—down in the wiregrass country, and by the livin and the dead I will never fight another war—not whilst the gallberry bushes and the tighteye thicket grow around the headwaters of Panther creek."

Then Dave punched a hole in the ground with his peg leg, waved a last farewell with his empty sleeve, tumbled into the wagon and driv off, let us hope, to some pleasant strip of country where the rumblings and rumors of war will pester him no more forever.

"Gallin to Beat Six Bits."

Aint it plum marvelous how many various and sundry different things a man can recollect along in during of the Christmas? I was thinkin the other night and tellin mother about one happy New Year which didn't turn out so scandalous happy with me.

I was a youngster then—courtn and gallin and goin in to beat six bits. There was nothin in this green and wicked world at that time which was half so pleasant as to put on my store-bought clothes and saddle my horse and go forth amongst the ribbons and the calico. By my winnin ways and commandin apperments and nigger luck I could most in generally always manage so as to pick the prettiest girl in the bunch for my onliest own—which from that some of the boys didn't love me very much to speak of. And that's how come some scoundrel beats to play me a yellin dog trick on that particular New Year night.

In them days it come to pass that a family of people by the name of Dinkins had moved into the settlement from some big town over in Georgia, and amongst the rest there was one girl, which they called her name Susie, and she was as pretty as red shoes and buff stockings with blue garters. Big man like, I put in right away immediately and made my arrangements to go over across the creek and call on Miss Susie. In the meantime she had turned out to meetin two or three times and all the boys had a mighty waterin at the mouths for her company. But I maintain that the man which hits the first lick most in generally always whips the fight, and consequently when the other boys went to put in over at the Dinkins place they run right up again a braced game, as it were, and found the cards runnin my way like a shot.

Now it likewise also come to pass that New Year fell on Sunday that time. And by first candle light where should I be but over at the Dinkins place fingerin around Miss Susie worse than a stickin plaster? And who was there but me?

For the life of me I can't now remember a blessed thing we said—me and Miss Susie that New Year night. But from the best of my recollection the weather was cold as fuggins, firewood was ruther scanty, and the mainest thing was to keep warm. So at this late day it don't make a continental bit of difference what we said, or whether we said anything in particular. I can but only remember that it was most tremendously pleasant to be there, and it was worse than sheddin eye teeth and payin taxes for me to pick up and go home.

What next? Well, man sir, out of doors that was the darkest night I have ever saw, from the first settlement of the country down to the present writin. By gracious I could take my fingers and jest naturally feel the dark—I could hit it with a stick or slice it up with my pocketknife.

I had rid a little gray mustang pony over there, and but from the fact that he was pawin the earth and chavin the bit I never would of found him without a light. And when I did find him it was by touch and not by sight—which even then I couldn't tell whether he was white or black. After so long a time I got the little gray unhitched, felt around till I found a stirrup and climbed into the saddle. Then about the next thing I knowed I didn't know a blame thing worth tellin.

What was the matter with us? Dad-blame it some scoundrel beasts had come along whilst I was in there payin my double-breasted compliments to Miss Susie and turned my saddle end for end—swapped things around so the horn of the saddle was turned toward the pony's tail—and buckled it on hard and fast, flank, girth and all. So when I mounted and the pony plunged off in the dark I was ridin one way whilst he was runnin the other. I didn't find out for certain what was the matter till it was everlastingly too late, and I don't reckon the little gray ever did know. He went off down the road at a three minnit rate buckin and snortin and pitchin at every jump. As for me, I couldn't do a blame thing but holler at the top of my voice and make out like I was stickin plaster to the best of my ability. I helt on till we got down there in the swamp—which the flank girth then broke and the little gray jumped out from under and left me layin there in the sandbed.

Did I get bad hurt? No. The good Lord will take care of His people, and onest more I come forth from a closet call with a whole hide and no bones broken. But I told that same old story to the prittiest girl in the settlement, went through a cold sweat, had palpitation of the heart and looked into the jaws of death in that one New Year night.

FIRST COPYRIGHT CASE.
Story of a Monk, a Manuscript and a Sacred Stork.

In a late lecture before the League of Political Education George Haven Putnam told the story of the first attempted infringement of copyright. The Benedictine monks, in the year 567, possessed a very valuable manuscript on papyrus or parchment, a copy of which was greatly desired by Columba, an Irish monk who lived in a neighboring monastery. Columba applied to Finian, the head of the Benedictists, for permission to copy the manuscript. Finian, setting great store by the manuscript and being a little jealous of the neighboring monastery, refused the request. Columba would not take no for an answer. He waited around the Benedictine monastery until night came, and when the monks had all retired he stole into the cell where the precious manuscript was kept, chained to a pillar, and copied it on parchment or papyrus he had brought for the purpose.

It must not be presumed that Columba wrote in darkness. It is true that the monastic library was not supplied with electricity, gas or even candles, nor did Columba carry a dark lantern; but his left hand emitted a phosphorescent glow which illumined the pages of the manuscript.

Columba's work also had the approval of a sacred stork, which was stabled, or caged, in the library, and while Columba worked the stork stood on one leg and watched by his side.

It happened that a passerby, late in the night, noticed the light in the library, and, curious to know what was going on at such a late hour, he put his eye to the keyhole in the door. The sacred stork, who was aware of this intrusion by that intuition possessed only by sacred storks, at once demonstrated his approval of Columba's work by darting the point of his beak through the keyhole and plucking out the eye of the spying thief.

The wounded man hastened to Finian and told him that sorcery, as well as optical surgery, was being practiced down in the library. Finian hastened to the library and there found Columba in the act of copying the last word of the manuscript. The sacred stork, meantime, had retired to his accustomed cavern and was feigning sleep.

"You have stolen my manuscript," exclaimed Finian.

"I have stolen nothing," replied Columba. "There is your manuscript, just as I found it. What have I stolen?"

"True, you have left the manuscript," said Finian, "but you have stolen its essence—all there is valuable in it, and the copy you have made is, therefore, mine by right, and I will take it from you."

Whereupon he fell upon Columba and took the copy, incidentally administering a sound drubbing to the literary thief and establishing a precedent for all future authors and publishers.

It is further recorded that the wise, sacred stork stood steadfastly on one leg in his corner and interfered not in the fight.

This copy which Columba, now at St. Columba, made is to-day to be seen in a museum in Dublin, and his writing was apparently done with silver ink.—N. Y. Mail and Express.

LOST ARCHDUKE OF AUSTRIA.
Twice Declared Dead, But Possibly Still Pursuing His Adventurous Career.

A lawsuit lately ended in Switzerland apparently puts to rest the last rumor of the survival of Capt. John Orth, long known to the world as Archduke John Salvator of Austria. This Hapsburger prince gave up his titles and estates that he might be free from all the entangling alliances of his family, and married Ludmilla Stubel, the sister of a Casino chorus girl. He qualified as a sea captain, bought the full-rigged ship Margherita, and sailed in her for South American ports. From one of these ports he started to round Cape Horn, and no news of him or his wife has been received since, although from time to time he was said to have been found in some remote part of the earth—once fighting in the Chilean army, again commanding a warship in the China-Japanese war, and finally cruising among the South sea islands. A professor sent out by Emperor Francis Joseph to investigate these reports, returned after a year's absence with the conviction that Orth still lived, but he was unable to give sufficient evidence to spread his conviction to the rest of the world, although Orth's relatives hoped on.

The Hamburg Marine Insurance company, with which Orth insured the Margherita, paid the policy. The payment was preceded by some legal difficulties, however, and these were renewed when a demand was made by Orth's family on two Swiss banks for money deposited with them by Orth before his fateful voyage. The retiring archduke placed $200,000 each in the banks of St. Gallen and Freiburg. The Freiburg bank acceded to the demand, and the $200,000 was transferred to the Vienna credit institution. The bank of St. Gallen would not give up its deposit on demand, however, taking the ground that the lawful declaration of Orth's death could not be made before the expiration of 30 years from the time of his disappearance; that is, 30 years from 1890, or in 1920. The courts decided against this contention, and the remaining $200,000 will be placed in the same bank with the other.

So the man who preferred to be a nobody rather than an archduke virtually has twice been declared dead by European courts, although his adventurous spirit may still be found marching on through the tales of romances and far-away correspondents who are unwilling to spare his curious personality and devious career from the narratives of to-day.—N. Y. Sun.

Singing Strengthens the Lungs.
It is asserted that singing is a corrective of the too common tendency to pulmonary complaints. An eminent physician observes on the subject: "The Germans are seldom afflicted with consumption, and this, I believe, is in part occasioned by the strength which their lungs acquire by exercising them in vocal music, for this constitutes an essential branch of their education."—Chicago Times-Herald.

Penological.
They broke the news to the convict as gently as possible, but he was nevertheless quite overcome.

"Pardon?" he shrieked. "Surely, you jest. You shook me. Pardon? For me? After I have been habituated to every luxury? It will kill me. Mercy! I implore you, mercy!"

But there was no mercy. The will of the law was inexorable.—Detroit Tribune.

A KOKOMO SCHOOLMASTER.
From the Tribune, Kokomo, Ind.

Mr. John Leahy, a well known school-teacher of Kokomo, Indiana, makes the following well written statement regarding his illness from rheumatism and a complication of diseases, and subsequent cure.

"Thirty years ago, when I was 35 years old, I was attacked with rheumatism, accompanied with marked and increasing disturbances of the nervous system, puls in the head, and most serious of all, symptoms of organic heart trouble.

"The cardiac involvement increased as the rheumatism progressed, and it was not a great while before the heart troubles assumed the chronic form. My brain was much disturbed and my physician was alarmed, fearing meningitis, as the articular inflammation diminished while the cerebral disturbance increased. But I was spared this additional infliction, I am thankful to say, for again the joints began to swell, and the pain in the head to subside, though it settled into a dull rheumatic headache, which no skill of the physician could relieve.

"Of course, during the early stages of the disease, I was confined to bed. Then I got up and tried to move around a little, and really I think I became used to the pain.

"It was in the spring of 1893 when I was first afflicted. For three years the disease continued, during which time I was attended by the best physicians in the state, some of whom are considered at the head of their profession in the west. These gentlemen, through zealous, and splendid diagnostics, could not help me. They could all describe my disease, and tell me better how I felt than I could myself, but their remedies had no effect on me whatever. I was a fearful sufferer from insomnia, and the nocturnal which I took to superinduce sleep were legion. In addition to other troubles, my stomach gave out altogether. I think probably from the preparation of salicylic acid, with which I had been abundantly dosed. I could not assimilate food, and lost flesh until I became almost a skeleton. My condition of nerves at this time cannot be described. Terrors by night and terrors by day were indeed mine, and though generally utterly unreal, they were most tormenting as though they had the most material existence.

"So matters continued until the spring of this year (March, 1896). I was still failing and becoming more of a wreck every day, when a friend of mine, a druggist in Logansport, Indiana, recommended me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, saying that they had recently cured a customer of his who had been similarly afflicted, and in as bad plight as I.

"I did not at once act on my friend's recommendation, but after two or three days I did so and bought a supply.

"Now there is no exaggeration in what I am about to write, for it is the honest truth. I had not taken Dr. Williams' Pink Pills two days when I began to get relief. First of all my nervousness and tired, and wicked headache showed signs of abating, then my sore and painful joints grew easier, my stomach and kidneys began to do their work again, my tongue became clean, all foulness disappearing, and better than all my heart became normal in its action.

"Before I had taken four boxes I was a well and hearty man, and I now eat, drink, sleep and work as well as anyone, and after three years of suffering such as mine, it may be imagined that I am more than tolerably happy and contented with life.

"I have recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to many, among others my sister, Mrs. Ellen Patton, of Chicago, Ill., who is a rheumatic sufferer, but I have not heard as yet what they have done for her.

(Signed) JOHN LEAHY."

Witness: JAMES LEAHY.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood, and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever kind. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

PERSONAL MENTION.
Ruskin has squandered in good deeds a fortune of $750,000, and his present income depends almost wholly upon the royalties of a recent popular edition of his works.

Only the other day a story was circulated to the effect that Kipling was to receive 25 cents a word for a new story to be printed in a London magazine. Now it is said that two American editors have combined to take 50,000 words at double that price.

Susan B. Anthony began to make stump speeches for the cause of abolition in 1853, the year Mrs. Leese was born. After her first speech Miss Anthony started out over the country, and this first speech of hers is said to have raised a greater commotion than any of the Kansas lady's.

Patti is writing reminiscences in which she says she was born in 1844 and made her debut in 1859. Her good sense is shown in advice she gives girls anxious for success on the stage. She says: "You must be a good workman at your trade before you can be an artist in your art."

HINTS TO VEIL-WEARERS.
The most important hint on the wearing of veils comes from the oculist. It is: "Don't."

The economical girl's rule is: "Always buy thin chiffon, black and white. It will wash like linen; it is always inconspicuous. It does not tear, and it does protect the face from the breezes."

The esthete cries aloud: "Don't, don't, don't wear veils with big 'spotches' of black on them. It makes the prettiest girl look like the victim of some hideous plague."

The complexion specialist entreats veil-wearers thus: "Whatever you do, don't wear dusty veils. Face steaming and massage will not undo the damage to the skin caused by soiled and dusty bits of chiffon and tulle."

The conservative dame says: "Never wear a veil that is conspicuous in color or design. Avoid the greens that give a jaundiced appearance to their wearers and reds that no one but silly novelty-seekers would think of destroying their complexions with. Wear fine tulle, chiffons and malines, with modest dots."

The Strongest Fortification
Against disease, one which enable us to undergo unscathed risks from hurtful climatic influences, exposure, overwork and fatigue, is the vigor that is imparted to a debilitated physique by the peerless medicinal safeguard, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. You may possess this vigor in a higher degree than the trained athlete, although your muscular development may be far inferior to his. Vigor implies sound, good digestion and sound repose, two blessings conferred by the Bitters, which remedies malarial, rheumatic, nervous and kidney trouble.

There is no message which brings more gladness to a true woman's heart than the sweet assurance that a little one is coming to bless her life and call her "Mother."
But in all her loving preparations for the expected little guest, a mother is liable to forget that her own health and physical condition is the most important provision which can possibly be made for the baby's happiness. If the prospective mother is weak, nervous and anxious, this condition is bound to react on the baby's constitution. No daintiness of wardrobes will compensate for the loss of the natural, healthy vigor which a mother should bestow upon her baby. As early as possible during gestation, the expectant mother should reinforce her bodily powers with the sustaining, health-bringing influence of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

It gives natural, healthy vigor and elastic endurance to the organs specially concerned in motherhood. It makes the coming of baby perfectly safe and almost painless. It gives nerve-strength to the mother and vital hardihood to the child.

It is the only medicine devised by an educated physician specially to overcome all weaknesses and diseases of the feminine organs.

Mrs. Roscoe Vanover, of Robinson Creek, Pike Co., Ky., writes: "I wish to express my thanks to you for the good I have received from your 'Favorite Prescription.' I have used it at different times for the last five years, and always with the most gratifying results. But the greatest good received from the 'Favorite Prescription' was about four months ago when my last baby was born. I was afflicted with 'child-bed fever,' but your remedy cured me. I am 27 years old, weigh 147 pounds, the mother of five children, and am enjoying the best of health."

CURRENT COMMENT.

Gov. TURNER, of Tennessee, granted 230 pardons during his term of two years.

FARMER'S Bulletin No. 45, issued by the department of agriculture at Washington, is devoted to insects injurious to stored grain, and contains many facts of interest and value to farmers who suffer largely from the depredations of these pests.

LOUISIANA claims to have the largest farm in the world. It is a tract in the southwestern part of the state, and extends 100 miles north and south and 25 miles east and west. It was bought in 1853 by a syndicate of northern capitalists, by whom it is still operated.

The public sentiment against bull fights in Mexico is spreading, and Chihuahua has followed the example of Chihuahua and passed a law prohibiting the sport in that state. Other state legislatures are also discussing the advisability of prohibiting bull fights.

HENRY CHENOWETH, a mason, 55 years old, returned to his home in Long Island City recently after recovering from a surgical operation by which the whole of his tongue was removed. His trouble was due to cancer. Local physicians said that Chenoweth's recovery was one of the most wonderful triumphs of modern surgery.

THERE are going to be some remarkable features of the big inauguration parade in Washington March 4, and one of them will be the appearance in line of the Allegheny County Six-Footers' club of Pittsburgh, Pa. Every one of the 100 members of this organization is at least six feet tall, and some of them are veritable giants. They will be equipped with full dress uniforms.

STATISTICS recently published by the Spanish government show that out of 19,000,000 inhabitants 8,727,519 persons are not engaged in any business. Many of this class have been supported by the enormous taxation levied on the colonies. The number employed in agriculture is but 4,033,491, of whom 800,000 are women. There are 6,104,470 illiterate in Spain and 91,237 illiterate.

GEORGIA is the banner state of the blacks, having a colored population of 358,996 to a white population of 978,357; Mississippi is second, with a colored population of 744,749 and 544,851 whites; South Carolina is third, with 689,141 colored people and 402,008 whites; Alabama, fourth, with a colored population of 679,299 and 533,713 whites, and Virginia fifth, with 635,858 colored people and 1,020,132 whites.

A FEATURE of the inaugural parade at Washington will be a band of Indians in their full regalia. The idea, which was first suggested by the civic committee, has received the approval of Grand Marshal Porter. The feature is expected to be extremely interesting and picturesque, as the Indians will march in their own distinctive dress, with all the paint and ornaments they wear on gala occasions.

THE aggregate amount of money given by private individuals to American educational and religious institutions, to charities, libraries, hospitals, museums, etc., during 1895 was $33,670,120. This shows a gain of $4,000,000 over 1895, and $13,000,000 over 1894. This showing only tells a part of the whole story of the giving of the year, for it takes no account of the gifts less than $1,000. Colleges received one-half of the whole sum, or $16,000,000, and the charities came next, receiving $10,000,000.

MARKED progress has been made in the framing of the new tariff law. An effort will be made to report the bill to the house within a very few days after the meeting of the special session. Excessive foreign importations in advance of the increase of duties will be checked so far as possible by two devices. One will provide that goods in warehouse when the new bill takes effect shall become immediately subject to the duties then in force. The other device for limiting importations is to get the bill upon the statute book as quickly as possible.

In his report to the Smithsonian regents Secretary Langley claims to have practically solved the problem of aerial navigation. He says he has reached a measure of success which justifies him in stating that mechanical flight has now been attained. On May 16 last a mechanism, built chiefly of steel and driven by a steam engine, made two flights of over half a mile. Since that time this result has been nearly doubled. In each case there was no support from gas. The machine was 1,000 or more times heavier than the air in which it was made to move.

The most expensive work that ever was published in the world is the official history of the civil war, which is now issued by the government of the United States at a cost up to date of $2,334,323. It will take three years longer and an appropriation of perhaps $600,000 to complete the work, so that the total cost undoubtedly will reach $3,000,000. It will consist of 112 volumes, including an index and atlas, containing 178 plates and maps, illustrating the important battles of the war, campaigns, routes of march, plans of forts and photographs of scenes and persons.

PROF. M. E. BOIRAC, the eminent French scientist of the Lycee Condorcet in Paris, where he has taken place so many remarkable demonstrations in hypnotism, has just caused a sensation among French savants by causing a person several miles away to suddenly fall asleep. This extraordinary demonstration that distance is not a fatal bar to hypnotic control is regarded as important, because the subject hypnotized is unaware that he or she has been under the influence of another mind. Many fear the newly discovered power may heighten the abuses which are now made of hypnotism.

GEN. RUSSELL A. ALGER.

The Michigan Man Will Be McKinley's Secretary of War.

The Announcement Made After a Conference at Canton—He Was a Noted General, Governor of His State and Candidate for President—Brief Sketch.

CANTON, O., Jan. 30.—"I have been tendered and have accepted the war portfolio," thus spoke Gen. Russell A. Alger, of Michigan, to the Associated press representative yesterday afternoon. The general had just emerged from the south parlor, which is the conference room while Mrs. McKinley is out of the city. He and Maj. McKinley had just completed the interview.

RUSSELL A. ALGER.

view in which the formal tender and acceptance had passed.

Gen. Russell A. Alger was born in Lafayette township, Medina county, O., February 27, 1836. His grandfather served in the revolutionary war and is claimed to have been a descendant of William the Conqueror. When 11 years of age both his parents died. For the next seven years he was reared by his grandmother. He defrayed his expenses at the Richfield, O., academy during the winters. Subsequently he taught school, and in March, 1857, entered a law office in Akron. Two years later he was admitted to the bar. He entered the law office of Otis & Coffinham in Cleveland, but abandoned the practice of law the following autumn.

In 1861 he enlisted in the United States Grand Rapids, Mich., where he engaged in the lumber business, and where in 1861 he was married to Annette H. Henry.

In 1861 he enlisted in the Second Michigan cavalry and was made captain of company C. He was wounded in the battle of Booneville, Miss. Owing to his part in this engagement he was promoted to the rank of major. In 1862 he became lieutenant-colonel of the Sixth Michigan cavalry, and in 1863 was made colonel of the Fifth Michigan cavalry, his regiment being in Cuba during the war.

His health induced him to retire from the service. He was breveted brigadier and major-general "for gallant and meritorious services." He was private secretary to President Lincoln. In 1865, he removed to Detroit, where he has since been extensively engaged in the lumber and pine land business. Gen. Alger was elected governor of Michigan in 1884, receiving a plurality of 3,850 votes over Begole, fusionist. In 1888, he was one of the leading candidates for the presidency, but was defeated by McKinley. The acrimony which developed between the Alger workers and those of Senator Sherman, who was also a candidate, was intense, and the breach of friendship caused thereby between the general and senator is believed to have only recently been healed. He served one term as commander-in-chief of the G. A. R.

Goff and the Cabinet.

CHARLESTON, W. Va., Jan. 30.—A very close friend of Judge Nathan Goff has given out the information that Goff has declined the attorney-generalship in McKinley's cabinet, offered him by McKinley last week. He prefers to remain on the bench as United States district judge. One reason known is that the judge and his wife dislike Washington. A well founded rumor is abroad that Goff will be a candidate to succeed Senator Charles J. Faulkner two years from now.

BRADSTREET'S REPORT.

A Falling Off in General Trade Owing to the Cold Weather—Failures.

NEW YORK, Jan. 30.—Bradstreet's report says to-day: There has been a falling off in general trade, owing to the heavy fall snow and cold weather. There is a moderate increase in the distribution of heavy winter goods, but commercial travelers very generally report buyers more conservative than earlier in the month, and that wholesale trading in January, except in the lines specified, is smaller than for years. Mercantile collections are interrupted, and the improvement looked for in iron and steel is not in sight.

The most favorable feature of the business week is the sudden and sharp falling off in the number of business failures in the United States. The aggregate for the week ending Jan. 29 last week, a decrease of 102. When compared with the corresponding week of 1896 the falling off is 67, but there is an increase of 14 as compared with the like week of 1895. Contrasted with the like period in 1894, there have been 14 fewer failures this week than three years ago.

There have been increased sales of hides and leather; in some instances of shoes, of coal, fertilizers and southern pig iron for export.

The downward movement of prices for some of the more important staples continues conspicuous, notably for flour, wheat, oats, lard, coffee, petroleum, turpentine and tin plate. Quotations for iron, corn, pork, sugar, cotton and print cloths are practically unchanged. Concessions have been made in prices for iron and steel, yet quotations are nominally unchanged.

Independence or Death.

NEW YORK, Jan. 30.—Referring to the report that Spain was about to concede a home rule measure to the Cuban insurgents, Thomas Estrada Palma, of the Cuban junta, said yesterday: "Unconditional and absolute independence is all that Cuba will ever accept from Spain. If she cannot have it she prefers extermination. It is scarcely worth while to discuss a home rule proposition. It has not been made, and if it should be it will receive no consideration at our hands."

The Plague in India.

An Act Approved.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—The president has approved the act to attach the county of Audrain from the Western judicial district of Missouri and attach it to the Eastern district.

NATIONAL LAWMAKERS.

Condensed Proceedings from Day to Day of the House and Senate.

In the Senate on the 29th Senator Turpie (Ind.) made a speech of two hours' length on the Cameron Cuban resolutions. He bitterly denounced Capt. Gen. Weyler, characterizing him as the "Hervé of Havana," and paid a glowing tribute to the insurgent government and its leaders. Eulogies were then delivered on the late Speaker Crisp and a memorial was presented from the presidential electors of Delaware, asking for a congressional investigation of alleged election frauds in that state. After consuming most of the day in District of Columbia business the house took up the Indian appropriation bill. Mr. Curtis (Kan.) got an amendment adopted permitting merchants to go into the Kickapoo reservation to collect their accounts. The conference report on the immigration bill was presented and Mr. Johnson (Ind.) made a speech in favor of the early reform of the banking and currency laws.

The senate on the 30th Senator Turpie (Ind.) closed his speech on the Cuban resolutions, holding that Spain had utterly failed to quell the outbreak, and that the United States should intervene. The Wolcott bill for a survey of a water route to the mouth of the jetties at Galveston, Tex., to Houston, were agreed to and the bill finally passed. The house passed over the president's veto the bill for relief from the duties on the importation of the rate of 57 1/2 a month. The Indian appropriation bill was then considered. A bill was also passed to satisfy a claim for keeping 35 African slaves on a man to reconstruct the bill, until they were sent back to their country.

The senate on the 27th passed the military academy appropriation bill after the defeat of an amendment for the reconstruction of the West Point cadets in the inauguration ceremonies. The Nicaragua canal bill was then taken up and debated. Senator Vilas (Wis.) made a motion to reconsider the bill, but the senate adjourned before a vote was taken. The house, after a debate of four hours, adopted the conference report on the immigration bill by a vote of 131 to 118. Mr. Bartholdt (Mo.) speaking against the report.

The bill for an international monetary conference was debated in the senate on the 29th. Senator Chandler (N. H.) speaking in favor of it, Senator Stewart (Nev.) criticized the commission as futile, but stated that he would not oppose the measure. The Nicaragua canal bill and the bankruptcy bill were before the senate for a brief time, but no action was made on either of them. Early in the day a lively debate occurred over the resolution of Senator Allen (Neb.) questioning the president's right to suspend the writ of habeas corpus. The resolution went over for a speech by Senator Thurston (Neb.). A number of petitions regarding the speedy ratification of the Anglo-American trade treaty were taken up. Senator Fisher (Kan.) stated that the sentiment in Kansas appeared to be strongly in favor of the early ratification of the treaty. The appointment of William S. Fordham, of Kansas, as commissioner of internal revenue was confirmed. The house passed the Indian appropriation bill and entered upon the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill. The feature of the day was the scoring Mr. De Armond (Mo.) gave the secretary of agriculture for the recent issue of a pamphlet entitled "The Farmers' Interest in Finance."

By the decisive vote of 46 to 4 the senate on the 29th passed the bill for the appointment of commissioners to an international money conference. The bill provides for the sending of lands containing petroleum and other mineral oils under the place mining laws of the United States and the bill to prevent the speculating in the policy of the United States. The United States officers were also passed. Senator Bacon (Ga.) introduced a joint resolution, which was referred, deprecating war and advocating the policy of the federal government to arbitrate all differences with nations whenever possible. The senate then adjourned to the 1st. The house had an acrimonious debate over the conference report on the pending bills of the Atlantic & Pacific railroad on the purchases under the mortgage foreclosure. Mr. Murphy (Ariz.) introduced a bill to try Indian criminals in territories in the United States courts only. It was referred. The house then discussed the agricultural appropriation bill. The evening session was devoted to private pension bills.

TO SHUT OUT COXEY.

Populist Editors Will Hold a Meeting in Kansas City—The Object.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 30.—Rumors of a still further split in the ranks of the populist party were verified last night when A. B. Riddle, secretary and treasurer of the National Reform Press association, issued a numerously signed call for a meeting at Kansas City, Mo., February 22. This meeting will be in direct opposition to one which President Vandervoort has called for the same date at Memphis, Tenn. Following the call is a statement that the present National Reform Press association has diminished in membership until it has ceased to be a representative body and is run by men who have been repudiated by the party. This last is taken to be a side shot at Coxey, and it is hinted that the main purpose of the Kansas City meeting is to shut out the Massillon reformer. When Coxey was here some weeks ago with his "rump convention" he adjourned it to meet again in Memphis, February 22. The Rozelle party claims a following of 90 per cent. of the populist editors and intimates that if Coxey goes to Memphis he will meet another frost.

TWO REPORTERS KILLED.

Two Steamships on the Mississippi Collide with Resulting Deaths.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 29.—At 12:30 o'clock yesterday morning a collision occurred in the river about 12 miles above the quarantine station, between the steam yacht Argo and the fruit steamer Albert Dumois, in which the yacht had her bow stove in and sank within a very few minutes after the accident. How the accident occurred and who was to blame for it the courts will most probably be called upon to decide. Messrs. Webster and Bassini are missing and their fate is doubtless sealed. They were well known and popular reporters on the Picayune.

Melton Will Be Freed.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—The prisoners of the Compton work have been languishing in Cuban prisons, are to be unconditionally released, by order of the Spanish government. Aside from the general interest attaching to this information, it possesses a decidedly local favor for Kansas people, as one of the prisoners, Owen Melton, hails from the Sunflower state.

League Clubs in the Parade.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—Gen. Horace Porter, grand marshal of the inaugural parade, was in conference yesterday afternoon with D. D. Woodmansee, president of the National Republican League of Clubs, and yesterday evening issued an order pacing the Republican League clubs in one division, and ordered that they have the choice of position in the civic division. President Woodmansee is appointed marshal of the division, with the right to select a staff of 50 members. All league clubs are directed to report for assignment not later than February 20.

EUROPEAN BIMETALLISTS.

French, German and English Experts on the Outlook.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—The February number of the National Review will contain an important review of the bimetallic situation in Europe by the leaders of the movement in England, France and Germany, and arranged especially in view of the visit to Europe of Senator Wolcott, of Colorado, who is now in Paris. Edmund d'Artes, secretary of the French Bimetallic league, contributes a careful article on the situation and the steady growth of the movement in France. In it he declares that there is no doubt that the French government and a great majority of the French parliament are in favor of bimetallicism.

Dr. Otto Arendt, a member of the reichstag and of the Prussian diet, honorary secretary of the German Bimetallic league, declares that only England blocks the way. Germany, he adds, will participate in a conference called by any other power. Lord Aldenham, who is a director of the Bank of England, thinks that the month of March will enable Mr. McKinley to carry out the St. Louis programme in regard to bimetallicism and concludes with remarking: "There is no doubt that France and the United States, by agreeing together, could themselves maintain a bimetallic law, but for greater certainty and confidence it would be reasonable that they should ask for English and German cooperation."

THEY USED DYNAMITE.

A Train in Oregon Held Up and the Express Car Looted and Burned.

PORTLAND, Ore., Jan. 30.—The north bound overland train, which left San Francisco Wednesday and was due here yesterday, was held up two miles west of Roseburg, Ore., early yesterday morning. Fireman Hendricks slipped from the engine and ran to Roseburg and gave the alarm. Then, arming himself, he started back to the scene of the trouble. Superintendent Fields, of the Southern Pacific road, who was at Roseburg, quickly gathered a posse of a dozen armed men and started for the scene on an engine. Heavy explosions of dynamite or powder were distinctly heard at Roseburg during the progress of the hold-up. When the officers arrived it was found that the express car had been looted and burned. No one was hurt and the highwaymen succeeded in making their escape. The explosions set fire to the express car, and when the robbers left it was a mass of flames.

EXCITED GOOD FEELING.

The Effect of a Speech by President Cleveland to New York Doctors.

NEW YORK, Jan. 30.—The occasion of the celebration of the semi-centennial of the New York Academy of Medicine at Carnegie hall last night was made auspicious by the presence of President Cleveland. The president was invited to attend the celebration by Dr. Joseph D. Bryant, who is president of the academy, and also Mr. Cleveland's private physician. Carnegie hall was taxed beyond its capacity by the doctors and their guests long before the exercises of the evening were begun. On the stage and in the audience were many leading physicians from all over the United States. The feature of the entertainment of the evening was, of course, the address of President Cleveland, which excited considerable merriment and good feeling.

ECKELS' SUCCESSOR.

The Next Comptroller Will Probably Be Charles G. Dawes, of Evanston, Ill.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—From information gathered from applications for position who have talked with the president-elect on the subject, the Associated press feels warranted in stating that Charles G. Dawes, of Evanston, Ill., will be appointed comptroller of the currency to succeed James H. Eckels. The friends of Mr. Dawes believe that he will fully sustain the high standard of the office and additional prestige. He is at present a member of the republican national executive committee, and has achieved great success, both at the bar in Nebraska and in business circles in Chicago, during the past three years.

Misses Rosa and Talafiero Wallace, of near Wilsonville, spent the latter part of last week, visiting their sister Mrs. J. R. Beavers. Young ladies are so scarce here it was quite a treat to the young men to have visitors and they clearly showed their appreciation to these young ladies by their kind hospitality.

Columbianna is becoming quite a fashionable city. There is, on an average, about two entertainments a week, given to the young people. On Monday night they enjoyed a highly delightful evening at the residence of Mrs. L. C. Armstrong at the party in honor of Miss Nellie Parker.

To carry out the pledges of our salutatory we would say to our correspondents, who have so kindly assisted in the past, that their matter will be carefully scanned before being put into type. We hope they will continue themselves strictly to news—news that will be of interest to the entire county. The waste-basket will catch all the trash that comes in. Above all stick to prose. No poetry wanted.

Chewing tobacco good article at 20 cents. Smoking tobacco 18 cents. I keep tobacco in all grades and can suit the most fastidious.

The Southern Railway Company having established a coupon ticket agency at this place parties wishing through tickets to Texas or any point in the United States or Canada can secure them at their office at Columbianna at lowest current rates. New Millinery and Dress Making Establishment.

We are now ready to serve our friends and customers in the millinery and dress making line, and would be pleased to have them call on us when in need of anything in our line.

MISS FANNIE LONGSHORE.
MISS LATHA C. ARMSTRONG.
January 26, 1897.

We are pained to learn through a card from Rev. T. P. Roberts to his son-in-law J. R. White that the Rev. T. K. Roberts is in a precarious condition. Mrs. J. R. White, his sister, and Mrs. J. W. Johnston left on Monday to be with him. May their wise, tender and loving ministrations be blessed by a kind providence and result in his speedy recovery. Few men ever drew around them more devoted friends than "Brother Tom" as he is familiarly called. Many anxious friends all over the state will be greatly relieved to hear of his improvement.

Wilsonville Waifs.

J. W. Millstead went to Childersburg last week.

J. W. Ball made a business trip to Stanton a few days ago.

W. R. Smith went to Columbianna Sunday.

Young men, here is the place to learn book keeping and if you decline you will have missed a good opportunity. Tuition very low.

Miss Georgia Pope left Tuesday en route to Oxford where she will spend several weeks with her relatives and friends. We miss her very much and are looking forward to that day of return.

J. W. Ball has made quite an improvement in his line of machinery by adding another boiler and engine, also a planer, re-saw and edger. We wish him much success in his continued lumber business.

Rev. Parrish delivered two eloquent sermons last Sunday at the M. E. church; he will also conduct services next Sunday at same place of worship. The church conference will meet in the afternoon at three o'clock. All the members are requested to be present.

J. C. Jackson & Sons are erecting a telephone to their mills six miles north of this place. It is hoped that Weldon Town parties will connect same which would give us a through line of about 13 miles.

The Literary Society was postponed last Friday on account of the rain and snow and as yet we are undecided just when we will congregate again. We trust that it will be at an early date.

A number of young people entertained themselves by means of sleigh-riding last Wednesday. And the power of gravitation went strongly into effect with some of us.

Harpersville Echoes.

The cold wave struck here last week with a double force.

A. J. Warlick is now mashing corn at the mill.

Notwithstanding the cold weather last week, our town was full of drummers.

Corn sold here last Friday at a mortgage sale for 51 cents per bushel cash and cotton seed 12 1/2 cents.

Dr. Sam Welch, of Alpine, spent several days of last week here administering to his father who was very sick.

There was a good pair of mules sold here last Friday at a mortgage sale for ninety dollars cash.

W. E. Millender has resigned as bailiff of this beat and C. A. Glaze has been appointed in his place.

Let us have a constitutional convention by all means.

M. M. Robertson is collecting the delinquent taxes of this beat and J. P. McGraw is assessing all of those who have not assessed.

It is the opinion of our farmers that the oat crop was greatly injured by last week's cold weather.

E. Williamson, of Wilsonville, is speaking of connecting Wilsonville and Harpersville with telephone, and also extending it on to Vincent. This is a move in the right direction and we hope that Mr. Williamson will be successful in his undertaking. I feel sure that he will have the hearty support of all our people.

I have been informed that our wide awake merchant T. J. Martin, Esq., bought one hundred pounds of free silver tobacco last week, and seeing his name in the People's Advocate sometime ago petitioning to the legislature for a stock law in this beat, we have been wondering if he was "lying anywhere."

Where, oh, where! is your Wilsonville correspondent; we miss him so much. Sometime ago he was lamenting that the little birds had all gone. Tell him to come to Harpersville and we will show him the lark, the sparrow, the old blue jay and red bird and the pretty little wren.

Sam Thomas and Captain Wright left here last week with a drove of dead beef cattle for the Birmingham market. It is reported that hides and horns sell better than beef since they have got to making sausage out of the western horses.

Talk for the telephone, work for it and let us have it by all means.

Miss Kate Bradley is visiting her brother in Selma, and will probably remain several weeks.

If we are successful in getting the telephone it won't be long then until our town will begin to put on city airs.

Why don't those fellows hurry up and build that railroad from Macon to Birmingham. This road when built, will come by Harpersville and will pass through the best, timber, coal, ore and iron in the state; all between here and Birmingham.

Little Hansel Caldwell was right badly burned one day last week, but is improving.

February has come in like a lion, and if the old adage be true will go out like a lamb.

The recent rains have raised the waters so much that our people who have been hauling water so long have a plenty now.

Should we be so fortunate as to get a telephone office here then we want the court house, but we don't want the court house without the probate judge.

The rain, the snow, the mud, the slush and the wind are all here—and so is Jake.

JAKE.

C., and return, at rate of one fare for the round-trip. Tickets will be sold March 1st, 2nd and 3rd, good to return until March 8th, 1897.

For further information address any agent of the Southern Railway.

Some very interesting city proceedings were ended today by the Southern Railway Co. paying city taxes. They refused to pay city taxes for the year 1895 because an ordinance of the city exempted farm lands and they claimed this was unconstitutional. During the year 1895 this ordinance was repealed and cured this defect. However the Railroad Co. still did not pay their taxes for 1896 and Mayor Leeper instructed the City Tax Collector to levy on a passing freight train which Collector Evans did a few days ago. This matter was arranged by the freight train conductor leaving in the possession of the collector several box cars on which to serve his attachment. This was done and one of the cars was advertised for sale. But before the sale took place E. S. Lyman, Esq. was instructed to pay the taxes under protest; which he did. So this ends the matter for the present, but we understand from Mayor Leeper that the Railroad Co. will sue the city for the amount of the taxes paid, but not, as we have heard it rumored, for damages for attaching the freight train.

ALL SORTS.

Mr. J. C. Griffin killed another fine hog this week. It weighed 425 pounds, making in all 848 pounds of pork out of two 14-months-old hogs. Pretty good for a banker, is it not?—LaFayette Sun.

The taxable wealth of the negro population of the United States is over $300,000,000. There are 23,462 negro church bodies, with church property valued at over $26,000,000. There are over 1,000 college-trained colored ministers.

The ruthless slaughter of the elephant is the cause of one of the greatest complaints against the civilized immigration of Africa. Year by year judging, for want of trustworthy statistics, by the quantity of ivory exported, from 50,000 to 60,000 elephants are killed on that continent.

There is but one United States penitentiary in the whole United States. Federal prisoners are almost invariably taken to some state penitentiary. Fort Leavenworth has the only federal prison and it is a made-over affair from a military prison, which was originally a lot of quartermaster warehouses with a wall built around them. The prison will accommodate about 125.

Before the great freeze in Florida the annual orange crop was from 8,000,000 to 10,000,000 boxes. The estimate for this season is 70,000 boxes.

The coming legislature of South Dakota will be petitioned to pass a law for the protection of the public against incompetent dentists in that state.

The New York police department asks for the modest little sum of $7,000,000 for the expenses to be incurred in keeping the Gothamites in order during 1897.

The debt contracted by Spain to subdue Cuba amounts to about $400 to every citizen of Cuba, and in case of Spain's success Cubans will be compelled to foot the bill if it ever paid.

Department officers in Washington sometimes get queerly directed letters. One received by the second auditor the other day was addressed: "The Onerble 21 Orderly United States Dreshury, Washington, D. C."

THE CAMERA.

A ready sympathy is more powerful than the United Charities.

Compulsory economy is more pleasant to practice than to refrain from squandering a lot of surplus wealth.

McKinley's cabinet is gradually filling up and still there remains quite a number of unofficial people in the country.

Bank robbers are abandoning their avocation as unprofitable. They say the competition on the inside is too great.

The love that endureth forever is the love for the almighty scads.

When a man was spoken of as being on a skate during the last cold snap it was not necessarily a reflection on his sobriety.

The really empty gun can do little harm, but the brainless man is a thing to flee from as for your life.

HENRY CARR HORNADY.

Tuesday, Feb. 2nd, was Candlemas day. On this day the church celebrates the feast of the purification of the Virgin Mary. The origin of it is undoubtedly of heathen practice; the ancient Romans on this day burning candles in honor of Februa, goddess and mother of Mars. Pope Sergius, instead of trying to suppress the heathen rite, turned it to account for the church, by enjoying a similar offering of candles to the Virgin. There is an old tradition in Europe that a due Candlemas presages bad weather for the forty odd days that remain of the winter season. The Scotch express it in the distich:

If Candlemas is fair and clear
There'll be two winters 't the year.

In this country we call it "ground hog day," the legend being to the effect that on Candlemas the ground hog leaves his hibernating burrow, and seeks the open day. If he sees his shadow he hastens back, and remains incloistered for forty days; but if it's cloudy and stormy, he knows the winter is virtually over, and he remains in the outer world.

$100 Reward $100. The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one cured disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

"THAT BOY JEEMS."

Training Up a Boy in the Way for Him to Go.

A Powerful Particular Kind of Business—Old Man Cas Garner Picked a Winner and Jeems Measured Up to His Work.

Bringin' a boy up in the way you want him to go is a powerful particular and ticklish kind of business, and for a common thing I don't reckon more than one man in every hundred would know for certain how to take hold and turn off the job. Leastwise, from what I have seen and heard and learnt and know about the human family in general, it is now my private and public opinions that a whole passle of money is wasted in this country every year training boys up into ways which it was never intended for them to go—ways wherein they ain't fitten to go—ways in which they couldn't go if they wanted to, and wouldn't if they could.

Stating the Mainest Facts. Now in orderment to state the mainest facts of the case more in full I will give you the great common pint which I am drivin' at so plain till a fool—blind drunk and a runnin'—mought read.

There was Tom Dick Simpkins, which run for the legislature the first time I was a candidate and got the livin' day-lights beat out him. Well, when Tom Dick was a yearlin' boy at school he was bright as new money and terrible smart in all his books. He could git his lessons, it did look to me like, more quicker and easier than any boy in the school and always stood pat at the head of his class. If he went foot like this mornin' he would spell up to head inside of three days without half tryin'.

So consequently about this time old man Simpkins took up a fool notion to the extent that Tom Dick was smart enough to go to congress or run for governor, and with that he give it out amongst the neighbors that he was goin' in to spend money like water runnin' down hill on that boy and make a big lawyer outen him. So then Tom Dick he lit in and run through the Cross Roads school as quick and easy as a heavy dost of salts, and the next news we got from him he was off and gone to college. He went right on holdin' his own with the best and smartest boys that the country could bring forth and there want anything in the college that could set him back or turn him down. He made a smashin' good record, and at the finish he come down under the wire first, winnin' the race like a deer in a walk.

In the maintime old man Simpkins was blowin' his money in on Tom Dick like it was growin' on the trees, and if it so happened that he couldn't drop his wad fast enough he could always git plenty of help from that smart and promisin' boy. After comin' through college with a high and mighty flury, Tom Dick soon got to be a lawyer, hung out his sign accordin' and lit in to build up a big name and fame and let the whole entire discovered world hear from the Simpkins family.

But somehow or other the world went waggin' along at the regular old lick and the natives they wouldn't startle any to speak of. Old man Simpkins had fixed the nest and set the eggs, but, by gracious, the chickens didn't hatch any at all hardly. He had built the mill and laid the rocks, but somehow the ding thing just wouldn't grind, and it didn't make a blame bit of difference how he turned the water on. What was the matter with Tom Dick? The good Lord only knows—I don't. He went so far in fine style and shape, and then all of a sudden like he come down to a dead halt. If you was to go and ask Andy Lucas, the great horse trader, what was the matter with Tom Dick more than probable he would tell you that "the youngster had too much daylight under him and they didn't put no packs in his feet." And I reckon no doubts Blev Scroggins, the most swiftest man with the "documents" around Rocky Creek would tell you that the mainest trouble with Tom Dick was he thought he was smart enough "to come into the game with nary pair and win the pile." But as for me, I don't know for certain what was the matter with that boy. I do but only know that old man Simpkins sailed in and spent a big pile of his money bringin' up Tom Dick in a way that he wouldn't go and couldn't go and didn't go. After piddin' and fumblin' and foolin' around considerable, makin' out like he was a lawyer and dabblin' in politics here and there, he finally at last stewed down and petered out and quit.

How to Pick a Winner. Now there was an old man, Cas Garner—which he was one of the mighty few men I ever met up with that could say he brung up a boy in the way he wanted him to go, and the boy went that way. But old man Cas was dead sot in his own notions about boys and things and he played the game a whole lot different from old man Simpkins. I recollect once upon a time when I rid over to the Garner place one Sunday evenin' and passed a few pleasant hours with the old man and his folks.

At that writin' old man Cas—and Misses Garner between them—had 13 boys and four girls and hadn't burnt the cradle yet. The old man called up the whole drove whilst I was there that evenin' and stood them in a row so I could take a good look at them.

"Self praise is half scandalation, so they tell me, Rufus," says old man Cas, smilin' all over himself and runnin' his eye up and down the row of cotton-heads, "but takin' them as they come—up and down and all around—that is what you mought call a good average crop of children. I reckon maybe I had some cranky-fied notions when I first started out in the business, but I soon got well and quit. They are too frequent like and numerous now. I only make my figgeration for our children to come up to the general average, and you will never hear tell of old man Cas Garner grumblin' if they do that well. Throwin' them 13 boys in with the common run of sich dry cattle, I calculate that some of them will turn out first class, some only middlin' and some hardly that. It may be different with the girls, but as for the boys, if I can but raise three or four real good ones out of the pack I will be plum willin' to give thanks and say nothin'. Some people mought think they could raise them all up to be great men, but I know a whole lot better than that. They are all boys and all my boys—regular open-faced, stem-windin' American boys.

"You see this here youngster, with the puny and puny look and a head on him as big as a hamper basket, Rufus?" says the old man, layin' his hand on a boy that stood about middle way of the row. "Well, this is my comin' congressman. The old lady she has picked out two or three for preachers, and I tell her that out of the whole bunch we had ought to raise one that will do to send to congress. So I have picked the winner, and this is him. I will let him take his growth natural and slow for a few years longer, and then I will put him in trainin' to run with patience the race set before him. I don't see how it would make any particular difference whether he has got any name or not, Rufus, but anyhow, the name of our comin' congressman is Jeems—jest plain Jeems."

"That Boy Jeems" in Training. I forgot to tell you in the outstart, but anyhow, old man Cas Garner was one of the best fixed men in all of the surroundin' country. He want to say no ways rich, but he wore good clothes, and rode a fat horse with a sereakin' saddle, and had plenty of everything around him. It was some six or seven years after that Sunday evenin' when the old man called up his fine bunch of boys for me to look at, and named the winner for congress, and I was over there to see the Garner folks onct more. I soon took notice that the family looked ruther swunk up in size, and went on to ask about the boys and girls. It turned out that two of the girls had already took and got married whilst the others had went to havin' company right tolerably constant. Some of the boys went to the city, and got in business, and there was two or three off at college takin' on the finishin' touches to preach.

"What about our comin' congressman, Uncle Cas?" says I.

"Who, Jeems?" Well, I don't try to keep very close up with that boy, Rufus, but he is summus around the place," the old man come back, and then he sorter loosened up and went on to say:

"If Jeems ain't plovin' the best pair of nules on the place and layin' by swamp corn, I reckon you will find him runnin' the wagon and haulin' timbers to build a new barn, or either down on the creek clearin' up a new ground. You must recollect, Rufus, I am trainin' up Jeems for congress and learnin' him how to go in all the gait. He is firm in on shares with me this year. I give him a third of what he can make, with his board and washin' free. If the seasons hold out good and no bad luck comes our way, I reckon Jeems will go to school some this comin' fall and winter. It all depends on what we have got left after the crops come in and we count up and divide out. I will give him the time providin' he can rake and scrape up sufficient money to pay his way. He takes to books as quick and natural as a bound dog to a meat house and would be in school all the time if it was so he could.

"As to that, Rufus, you know good and well I am able to send the boy to school for 20 years, hand runnin', but Jeems don't know that and it ain't none of my business to tell him. It wouldn't do nohow for a boy in trainin' for congress. He has got plenty of speed on him right now, but I must work him somehow and manage so as to put the muscle on him and give him some stay-in qualities. He has got plenty of sense, but it will take some hard work to round him out and fill up the low places. The upper machinery is perfectly all right now, but in orderment to make him a dead sure winner I am bound to look out for the underpinin'.

Jeems must learn his right hand from his left, and stand alone and walk before he can run a winnin' race. I don't claim to know much about anything in this world, Rufus, exceptin' corn and cotton and niggers and mules and boys, but I'll be everlastin'ly dashed if I don't know all about them!

"Now the boys that my old lady has picked out for preachers, they are off at college, and our future merchants are now clerkin' around and doin' about in town. That is well enough and all right for them, I reckon, but as to Jeems, the comin' congressman, he must sweat for his feed and swim without gourd, Rufus. It never would do for things to come easy with Jeems. I am not goin' to push the youngster in his work, but let him take his own gait and come down to his knittin' steady and natural like. But when he goes on the track he is goin' to show down like a thoroughbred, and—maybe—you mought—well—at any rates, you can keep your eye on Jeems."

Showing Strong Points. I remained and tarried around over there in the hill country about a week on that trip, with my general headquarters at the Garner place. And along in durin' of that time I made it my business to watch that boy Jeems, which he was then 14 years old past, 15 come next grass. The first night he come up about dusk drivin' a six-mule team, the wagon loaded with fresh cut timbers. Him and a nigger boy then unloaded and took out and fed. After supper a crowd of the settlement boys come together and blowed up the dogs and went off possum huntin'. I could see with one eye that Jeems was the mainest leader of the pack. Soon the next mornin' I got up and was browsin' around the place to put a razor edge on my appetite, and there was the boy Jeems callin' up the hogs and drivin' out the cows and tendin' to the stock in general. One day me and old man Cas went out ridin' around through the fields lookin' at the crops, and way down in the swamp we run up with the boy Jeems and a squad of hand-cut timber men, and buildin' a new weather-house. That night Jeems come up with a new saddle horse which he had swapped for late in the evenin'—which he made the trade with a Methodist circuit rider passin' through the settlement.

When I got a good chance I asked old man Cas what sort of a trade Jeems had made.

"He jest naturally swapped the livin' socks off the preacher," says the old man, lookin' proud and tickled to death.

"I can't tell yet whether you will ever enter that boy Jeems in a race for congress," says I to old man Cas the mornin' that I left, "but I don't make no bones of tellin' you this much. If you ever can git him to go on the track and score for the start he will win the race, and you can put the gate money away in your flanks as easy as findin' it in the big road. He is already comin' down to his work in good shape and showin' some strong pints, and he hasn't shed off his baby teeth yet. Don't hold the ribbons too tight, and don't buckle up the checkrein too high, and that boy Jeems will earn his feed by and by."

And the Race Was Won. Did that boy Jeems ever measure up to the work which the old man had marked out for him to do? You can bet your last solitary dollar that he did. I was on the ground when he entered his first race for congress. I watched him from the start to the finish, and saw him come down under the wire like a thoroughbred—winner by a full length.

When the bell first tapped three candidates scored for the start. The other two showed up in some better style than Jeems, pulled on the bits and pranced back and forth across the track. But at the same time Jeems was keepin' cool and savin' himself for the work ahead. When they first went off you mought cover the whole bunch with one blanket, and things didn't change any to speak of till they swung into the home stretch. But after they passed the last quarter pole Jeems limbered up surprisin', squatted down close to the ground and come in ahead as easy as a boy in a base ball game would steal to the home base on his belly.

But whilst there may be one man in a hundred that can train a boy up in the right way for him to go, there are 99 that will make a botch of the game every clatter. A boy can't be a girl, but he is more than probable to be a human.

RUFUS SANDERS.

VENGEANCE OF AN EX-SLAVE.

Returns After Thirty-Five Years to Renew His Incendiaryism.

About the beginning of the war between the states, when Delaware was a slave state, Tilghman Foxwell, a farmer of Kent county, Delaware, lost his residence and farm buildings by two successive incendiary fires, closely following each other. Circumstances pointed to a young negro who was the slave of Mr. Foxwell as the incendiary.

He was arrested, and made a confession in which he admitted being responsible for both fires, and he would have been hanged for his crimes had not his master sold him out of the state, as the laws of Delaware gave him the right to do. He was sold to a slave trader by his Delaware master, and by him sold to a planter in one of the cotton states.

In the lapse of years the negro, the fires and other incidents connected with them were forgotten, but they have recently been brought to mind by two more disastrous fires on the same farm, now tenanted by J. Fletcher Truax, the first of which was five years ago and the other a few days ago. Before each fire a strange negro was seen lurking about the neighborhood, and when he first came he made inquiries about the owner of the farm. He disappeared after that fire, but a day or two before the last one the same negro was again observed and identified in Clayton, which is near the Foxwell farm. He has again disappeared, and though searched for, cannot be found.

He is believed to be the same man who burned the buildings on this farm 35 years ago and was sold south for his crimes. The vengeance of the ex-slave is much talked of in the vicinity, and a close watch will be kept for him hereafter. Some of the older colored people around here claim to have recognized him as the "boy" whom Mr. Tilghman Foxwell sold to "Georgy," and they imagine it is not the man in the flesh, but his spook periodically revisiting through compulsion the scenes of the man's earlier crimes and forced by fate to keep on committing them.

To prove it, they say he comes suddenly, no one knows from where, and disappears as suddenly, no one knows to where, and when visible will neither talk nor listen. One declares he saw the flames of the last fire wrapping around him, and while he was standing looking at him, and wondering why he did not burn, he suddenly vanished.—Chicago Chronicle.

LIKE A VAST VOLCANIC BUBBLE.

Extraordinary Freak of Nature Near the Mexican City of Puebla.

Rev. F. S. Bortain, of Puebla, writes as follows: "It may be of interest to some of the readers of the Herald who visit Puebla to know of one of the less visited attractions in the vicinity of the City of the Angels. I refer to the 'Coxcomate.' It is about 20 minutes distant from Puebla over the street car line to Cholula. Any street car conductor can point it out to the curiosity-seeker. It is the right of the car line, about 500 yards distant.

"It looks from the car window to be a pile of white stones or a well-bleached haystack. But upon closer inspection it proves to be a tumulus of white calcareous stone evidently of water formation, about 50 feet in height and 100 feet in diameter at the base. The form is that of a truncated cone. At the apex is an elliptical-shaped opening about 25 feet along the minor and 50 feet along the major axis. It is a bell-shaped cavity and lined with ferns of various descriptions. I should judge the depth to be at least 100 feet, and at the bottom, so far as is visible, the opening must be 60 feet in diameter. In the bottom, on one side, are to be seen some gorgeous ferns and on the other side a pool of water.

"Tradition says that the ancient Aztecs were accustomed to worship here the genius of the spot, and occasionally threw in a live victim to appease his subterranean majesty. It is also said that a few victims of the inquisition were thrown down here to reflect upon the controverted points of doctrine. At all events it is a most singular freak of nature, as it is in the middle of a level plain, or rather a barley field. It looks to have been some volcanic bubble, of which the great Mexican upland is so full, and is well worth a visit on the part of the curious.

"Although I have inquired among my Mexican friends, I have found no one who could tell me the meaning of the name 'Coxcomate.'"—Mexican Herald.

Cow Invades a Pantry.

A queer incident is reported from the West district, Rocky Hill, Conn. One day last week when Mrs. Charles Gilbert returned from a brief call on a neighbor she found one of the cows in the pantry. The bovine had stooped into its capacious stomach three loaves of bread and a lot of cake. In order to reach the pantry the cow was obliged to pass through two rooms, between tables and chairs and past a hot stove.

OFFICE GIRLS ARE EMPLOYED.

The Rising Generation of Femininity Is Supplanting the Office Boy.

The rising generation of femininity has been invading fields hitherto regarded as peculiarly those of the boy, just as her older sister, the new woman, has been acceptably filling positions, situations and professions which were formerly regarded as suitable only for the male sex. The office girl has appeared in Chicago during the past few months to take her place beside the army of women stenographers and typewriters.

No one knows exactly who began the innovation. Perhaps the idea was borrowed from the big department stores, which employ cash girls almost exclusively. A few years ago these stores used to employ boys and cash girls were seldom seen. But in course of time the girls became more and more popular, until the cash boy is now the exception, while the cash girl is the rule.

Much the same transition is predicted in the ranks of office boys. The old-fashioned office boy, who swears, smokes cigarettes and is impertinent usually, and reads dime novels in a corner or loafs when he is sent on some important errand, is fast disappearing, and it is predicted that in course of time the office girl will have entirely taken his place.

Office girls are now employed in a number of the offices in the big buildings downtown. The success of their sisters has suggested the idea to other girls of invading the field hitherto monopolized by their brothers and earning more wages than are paid to the cash girl. Every now and then a man who has put an advertisement for an office boy in the papers finds among the applications a letter from a girl, or if he asks that the boy apply in person one or more girls are apt to be among the score of youngsters who answer the advertisement. At first the man does not take kindly to the idea, and the would-be office girl finds it difficult work to secure a place. The men are prejudiced against the idea, just as at first the men were prejudiced against the idea of employing women as stenographers or typewriters.

Those who have had office girls in their employ are, however, very well pleased with them. They say that the office girl is superior to the office boy in many particulars. In the first place she does not know how to whistle, and she does not smoke cigarettes. As a rule, she has absolutely no taste for dime novels. She is usually bright, quick and energetic, and ever so much cleaner and neater than any boy can be. Testimony upon this point is almost unanimous, and most of those who have tried office girls declare that never again will they have an office boy around the premises.

Most of the office girls are ambitious. They are like the office boy of a generation or two ago, who entered the employ of their masters with a firm determination to rise to the topmost notch. They realize that in this day every occupation is open to them, and that they themselves may be lawyers, bankers, brokers, insurance agents, or anything else, if they are able to master the details of the business. They therefore keep their eyes open and learn all that they can about the business, that they may put the ideas so gained into practice, some years when there shall be an opportunity, some years in the future, for them to go into business of some sort for themselves.

Most of the office girls immediately begin to qualify themselves for promotion. They practice on the typewriter when they have a few moments to spare, and so qualify themselves for situations as stenographers. Some of them have already learned enough typewriting to gain an increase of salary and a position which calls for more typewriting and less of the office boy's duties.—Chicago Times-Herald.

ERRATIC GEOGRAPHY.

Mountains and Lakes Found on the Map But Nowhere Else.

Among the anomalous results that geographical exploration is constantly calling to the front is the annihilation of "landmarks" which have been considered to be firmly established. Less than three years ago it was discovered that Mount Iseran, a peak of the Graian Alps, which figured on all detailed maps of the Alpine regions with the very respectable elevation of upward of 13,000 feet, had no existence in fact, and the assumed mountain has since been consigned to oblivion. A somewhat less complete effacement was announced in the early part of the past year in the removal of 7,000 feet from the height of Mount Brown, in British America—generally credited with an altitude of 16,000 feet, in place of the 9,000 feet which is now given to it by Prof. Coleman—a condition somewhat similar to the experience of Mount Hood, in Oregon, which, when being gradually reduced from its presumed height of 16,000 feet to 11,000 feet, brought out the facetious remark that with a few more years of grace the mountain would be a hole in the ground. It is not alone the minor explorer, however, who is responsible for the perpetuation of great errors of observation. Sir Samuel Baker, the discoverer of the Albert Nyanza, the second great basin of the Nile, stated that from his position on the lake no boundaries of it could be traced southward to the limits of the vision; whereas, Stanley and others have since shown that not only did the lake terminate within a few miles where Baker stood, but that its northern shore was actually bounded by high mountains.

Mr. G. Scott Elliot, in his recent published work, "A Naturalist in Mid-Africa," in its most correct statement that "Mount Gordon Bennett, Mackinnon Peak and Mount Lamson are not mountains, but quite insignificant hills, if they had any existence at all." He also said: "I spent much time and trouble in trying to discover where on earth the enormous fresh-water sea, discovered and christened the Alexander Nyanza, by Mr. Stanley, could possibly be. This, of course, it is now clear, has no existence whatever." And, finally, as the latest negative contribution to geographical knowledge, we have in the Jackson-Harmsworth report from Franz-Josef Land (recently brought to London by the vessel of the expedition, the Windward) the assurance that not a trace of the so-called Peterman Land of Lieut. Bayer could be discovered, and that even Lieut. Land was merely a disjointed archipelago mass of entirely inconsiderable extent.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

SHORT NOTES OF SCIENCE.

An electric roller for massage purposes is composed of plates of copper and zinc and generates its own electricity.

The speculative astronomers are now arguing that the moon is in the shape of a plumb bob, and that the large end is always toward the earth.

Aluminum should always be used alone and pure, as it readily forms electric couples with every other metal and is then easily attacked by water.

Baron Kaulbars, a Russian astronomer, was led by his observations of the last solar eclipse to propound the theory that there are in the sun vast accumulations of electricity which influence comets and meteors.

Billiard balls are first roughened by a lathe from the tusk, then left from six months to a year in a room about the temperature of an ordinary billiard hall. This length of time is necessary because the ivory shrinks more in one direction than another, and the seasoning must be complete before the balls are finished and polished.

Take care that you don't go that way, when you try to make your washing easier. Better be sure of what you're doing.

Get Pearline, the original washing-compound, the best-known, the fully-proved. There are plenty of imitations of it. But even if they're not dangerous—and some are—they're not economical.

Pearline used properly, goes farther, does more work, and saves more wear, than anything else that's safe to use.

CURRENT TOPICS.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF.

FIFTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

Second Session.

IN the senate, on the 1st, a resolution was offered and referred looking to an investigation of the recent presidential and state election in Delaware and an inquiry as to whether a republican form of government exists in that state. The Nicaragua canal bill was then taken up. The discussion proceeded on Mr. Vilas' motion to have the bill recommitted. Mr. Vilas secured the floor and had not concluded his remarks when the senate, after a short executive session, adjourned. In the house the day was devoted to miscellaneous business, a number of bills being passed. The last hour was spent in consideration, in committee of the whole, of the diplomatic and consular bill, which was not concluded when the house adjourned.

IN the senate, on the 2d, Mr. Chandler (rep., N. H.) introduced a resolution, which went over, looking to the ultimate use of silver as well as gold as standard money with free coinage of both. The conference report on the immigration bill was the subject of long speeches by Mr. Gibson (dem., Md.) against, and Mr. Lodge (rep., Mass.) in defense of the report of the conference committee. The report went over without action. The remainder of the day was taken up by Mr. Vilas in continuation of his speech against the Nicaragua canal bill. In the house the only business of importance was the passage of a resolution providing for a joint session of congress on the 10th to count the electoral votes and declare the result.

IN the senate, on the 3d, two resolutions previously introduced, looking to the impeding or preventing the sale of the Union Pacific railroad and the judicial decree of foreclosure, were discussed at length by Mr. Thurston, the morning hour expiring before he concluded. The remainder of the session was devoted to the consideration of the fourth day's session, after nearly the whole day was devoted to the contested-election case of Cornett vs. Swanson, from the Fifth Virginia district, the latter's title to the seat was confirmed by an overwhelming majority.

IN the senate, on the 4th, as soon as the routine morning business was disposed of, house bill to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the city of New York, was taken up, and went over without action. The conference report on the immigration bill occupied attention for a time, after which the Nicaragua canal bill was taken up. Mr. Vilas delivered the fourth day's installment of his speech in opposition to it. In the house the District of Columbia bill was further considered and remained the unfinished business. The further conference asked by the senate upon the immigration bill was agreed to, and conferees were appointed. A few important bills were passed.

IN the senate, on the 5th, Mr. Richard R. Kenney was sworn in as senator from Delaware and took his seat. Mr. Thurston continued his speech in opposition to the resolution of Mr. Allen (rep., Neb.), questioning the right of the executive department to consent to the judicial sale of the property of the Union Pacific Railroad Co. The Nicaragua canal bill was taken up, some adverse speeches being made thereon. A large number of pension and other bills unobjectionable to were taken from the calendar and passed. In the house 61 private pension bills were disposed of; several contested-election cases were considered and decided in favor of the sitting members, and the conference report on the military academy bill was agreed to. An evening session was held for the consideration of private pension bills.

THREE HUNDRED KILLED

Desperate Fighting Between Christians and Mohammedans.

The City of Canes Put to the Torch—Christians Driven from Their Homes by the Flames Only to Meet Death at the Hands of the Turkish Soldiers.

LONDON, Feb. 8.—A dispatch to the Central News from Athens says that desperate fighting has occurred between the Christians and Mohammedans in the island of Crete. The Mussulmans have set fire to the city of Canea, and the place is now burning. The city is in a state of anarchy, and a Christian is safe nowhere. Many Christians who had locked themselves in their houses were driven out by the flames, only to meet death at the hands of the Turkish soldiers, who shot them down at sight. A number of Christians have succeeded in finding refuge in the war ships in the harbor, but the outlook for those still in the city is very precarious.

The situation is so critical that the British and French war ships to protect the consulates of their respective governments.

The dispatch further says that fully 300 persons have been killed in Canea. Many of them lost their lives while attempting to reach the war ships.

THE SAC AND FOX RAID.

Father and Son Selsed and Carried Off—The Former Believed to Have Been Lynched.

GUTHRIE, Okla., Feb. 5.—A telephone message has just been received which definitely locates the reported Sac and Fox raid at Stroud, in the eastern part of Lincoln county. As the result of an old feud, Wm. Lurton shot and killed another man and a party of masked men rode into town at night, shut up the town, drove the citizens out and with Lurton and his son Everett as prisoners, rode off into the Creek country. Later as Lurton was afterwards released, it is believed the old man was lynched. The town of Stroud is terrorized and deserted, but the citizens are arming a large posse. The telephone wires have been cut near Stroud, and further particulars are unobtainable.

THE STROUDE TRAGEDY.

The Town Terrorized and Several Citizens Carried Off to Be Murdered.

GUTHRIE, Okla., Feb. 6.—Communication has been restored to Stroud, and particulars of the recent raid have been received: Two weeks ago, while quarreling over some land, Griffiths was shot and killed and his father slightly wounded by Henry Lurton. Lurton was arrested, but admitted to bail Wednesday. Old man Griffiths and three of his sons, accompanied by four other men, rode into Stroud and compelled everybody to close their stores and hide away, saying there was going to be a battle. Several hours later as Henry Lurton, his son Everett, Jim Furber and old man Robinson were entering the town they were ambushed and compelled to surrender by the other crowd, who bound them to horses and rode off into the Creek country with them. Later they released Jim Furber, who returned and said that they had declared they would hang old man Lurton and shoot his son and Robinson. The people of Stroud were completely terrorized, and most of them have been afraid to venture from their houses since.

A posse was organized at Chandler Thursday night to go to the rescue of the three men carried off, but there is little hope of reaching them in the woods and mountains of the Creek country.

A message from Stroud late last evening says that a report had reached there that Henry Lurton and Robinson have been found dead hanging to trees and their bodies riddled with bullets, but it cannot be confirmed. Stroud is south of Sac and Fox agency, and this encounter gave rise to the reports Thursday of the raid on the agency which did not take place.

DUN'S COMMERCIAL REVIEW.

The Waiting Attitude of Business Still Maintained—No Special Features Prominent—Wheat Slowly Advancing—Sales of Cotton and Wool Unsatisfactory—More Hopeful Feeling in Iron—No Embarrassment in the Money Market.

NEW YORK, Feb. 6.—R. G. Dun & Co. say to-day in their weekly review of trade:

No important change in business appears, but the number of manufacturing establishments starting much exceeds the number of those stopping during the week, and so much that the curtailment of working time in many cotton mills probably does not lessen the aggregate productive force or amount of wages paid. There is distinct increase in orders for woolen goods, some gain in the silk manufacture, a waiting condition with gain in one branch of boots and shoes, and indications of better things coming in the iron and steel manufacture.

To many it is the most perplexing feature of current events that wheat does not rise much, though it advanced 1 1/2 cents for the week. Atlantic exports have been only 1,000,046 bushels, flour included, against 1,955,456 for the same week last year, while western receipts have been only 1,463,170 bushels, against 2,800,407 last year. The condition of the market is not explained by any special information, but current prices show that no great confidence is felt in the estimate of supplies available for the rest of the year.

Cotton fell to 7 1/2 cents, after the agreement to close Full River and other print cloth works became known, but recovered the quotation of a week ago, 7 1/2 cents without further news. Spinners' takings have been so small this year, those of northern mills about 400,000 bales less than in 1894-95, that the admitted narrowness of demand for goods has at present considerable weight.

Sales of wool have been smaller than in other recent weeks, and yet are far in excess of the consumption of all mills for a week if all were fully employed. At the three chief markets the aggregate for the week has been 13,663,700 pounds.

There has been only a slight stiffening in prices, but more foreign wool will be taken and stored, it is believed, if western holders continue to demand higher prices.

Prices of Bessemer pig and gray forge at Pittsburgh have slightly advanced with a much more hopeful feeling, notwithstanding the comparative narrowness of the demand for finished products, and in plates and wire and wire nails there is much more business with good prospects. Billets are quoted at $14.25 with scarcely any demand at present, and rods at $21, while No. 27 black sheets are quoted at only two cents.

Reports that 25,000 tons of steel plate and sheet bars have been exported to England are only indications of the temporary excess of supply over demand in this country, and are not supposed to have realized any profit. Yet it is stated that prices of cast pipe are from two dollars to three dollars per ton lower at New York than at Scotch works.

Bars are quoted at the lowest price ever known at Philadelphia, without much improvement in the demand, and steel rails are still inactive and unchanged in price, the railroads waiting for a decline corresponding to the fall in billets. But on the whole the demand for iron and steel products is slowly gaining, and a considerable proportion of the works are fully employed, though the gain is not yet enough for those who have taken large stocks of material or products on speculation.

In the money market there appears no embarrassment, and the large sale of Northern Pacific and Oregon Navigation securities to European capitalists has given additional assurance that balances due to this country will not be cancelled for some months to come, so that the point of possible gold exports is removed still farther. The course of the stock market has been unconstructive and dealings have not been large, but the average of railroad stocks has advanced a small fraction and the average of trust stocks has slightly declined.

Failures for the week have been 311 in the United States, against 323 last year; and 63 in Canada, against 67 last year.

DRIVEN INTO PORT.

The Battleship Indiana Again Found Wanting and Her Sea Worthiness Doubtful—She Could Not Keep the Pace Set by the New York, and Returned to Hampton Roads for Further Inspection.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—What may be represented to foreign governments as an ignominious failure of one of the crack vessels of the new navy receives an explanation which navy officials of experience regard as satisfactory. The return of the battleship Indiana to Hampton Roads yesterday after having been at sea with Admiral Bance's squadron scarcely 24 hours, was due to the same turrets which got loose in a storm last fall, when Capt. Evans commanded the ship in evolutions off Long Island. On that occasion the big guns projecting from the turrets swung back and forth across the decks as the ship heeled over on her beam ends and the gravest fears were felt that the magnificent vessel would "turn turtle" and go down. Capt. Evans however to and lashed the guns temporarily which enabled him to reach port, and then several months were spent at the navy yard in trying to remedy the defects.

Capt. Evans was succeeded in command by Capt. Taylor, formerly of the war college, and yesterday was Capt. Taylor's first experience for some time in an armored ship that has earned a reputation for wallowing, and it is understood the long rollers following the recent heavy gale made themselves felt on the ship when the fleet got off Hatteras.

If she had not been restricted to squadron formation, Capt. Taylor might have headed his course into the sea, but as the New York, with her high free board and notable stability, was setting the course, and as the Indiana could not safely stay with the fleet, she was permitted to return. If her turrets had broken loose off Hatteras the ship might have been lost. The navy department gave out the following statement regarding the matter yesterday afternoon:

"The Indiana returned to-day to Hampton Roads, having made a run with the squadron. When she went out this time she had with her a new locking device for her turrets, lately put on at New York, and which was intended to remedy the trouble she had the last time she put to sea in heavy weather. This present device has three times the strength of the former one. Very properly the officers of the ship have been cautious and observant as to its workings, and she has returned to the roads for a further inspection of it and possible readjustment."

The department expects to have the Indiana again at sea in a few days.

THE CRUISER BROOKLYN

The Damaged Vessel to Go Into the League Island Dry Dock.

CHESTER, Pa., Feb. 5.—If the conditions remain favorable it looks to-day as though the cruiser Brooklyn may leave her anchorage at Marcus Hook for the dry dock at the League Island navy yard to-morrow. The storerooms finished unloading the coal from the vessel this morning and all the ammunition has been taken out. The diver's report shows that the plates have been ripped from a point near the bow to a point under the engine room, but the damage is confined to the port side.

The injury is serious, but it is not as bad as was at first thought from the quantity of water forced into the double bottom compartments. The skin is not damaged, and the bolts were not sheared off. Capt. Cook has received a telegram from Eleven Point lighthouse, Mich., expressing sympathy for the accident to the Brooklyn. The captain, for a number of years, was stationed at this lighthouse.

MONEY MISSING.

Sudden Disappearance of Funds Causes the Suspension of a Bank.

BUTTE, Mont., Feb. 6.—The Northwestern national bank at Great Falls failed to open its doors yesterday morning, and the reason given in a dispatches is a discovered defalcation of about $27,000. The cashier is B. D. Hatcher, and he is still in Great Falls. One dispatch says the money was in the vaults Thursday, and was missing yesterday morning. Facts are hard to obtain, owing to the excitement caused by the failure and the reticence of the bank officers. The bank had a capital of $250,000 and an advertised surplus of $50,000. Thos. Couch, G. M. Hyams, Frank Klepko and other prominent stockholders in the Boston & Montana and Butte & Boston mining companies are members of the board of directors of the bank, and W. G. Conrad, a Great Falls capitalist, is president of the institution.

Charles Koch Must Seek a New Job—Driven Out by His Fellow Workmen.

COLUMBUS, O., Feb. 6.—When Charles Koch, an employee of Hayden's chain factory, arrived at his forge yesterday morning he found it in charge of a committee of his fellow workmen. He was notified that he would have to leave the shop. It had been discovered that, though he had regular employment at good wages, he had imposed on the public relief association for the poor unemployed and taken a large amount of groceries to his home. Koch refused to go and was driven off with eggs and cries of "Get a rope!" ringing in his ears. Koch owns his own home.

M. Rippey, near Salem, a few weeks ago. The detectives were convicted of murder in the first degree and appealed the case. They came to Salem for an escaped convict from Louisville, and mistook Rippey for their man and shot him dead. They narrowly escaped lynching at the time.

Resignation of the Portuguese Ministry Accepted by the King.

LISBON, Feb. 6.—Premier Hintze Boibora delivered to the king the resignations of the entire ministry, informing his majesty that the cabinet had found themselves unable to grapple with the present economic and financial situation, and had, therefore, resolved to retire from office. The king accepted the resignations, and summoned the progressive leader, Senor Castro, to form a new cabinet. Senor Barros Domez, a member of the council of state, will be appointed minister of foreign affairs.

SOUTHERN GLEANINGS.

Prayer Vs. a Distillery.

C. D. Gillespie, of Tucker county, W. Va., applied to the finance committee of the West Virginia legislature for the refunding of $45 paid by him last summer for the privilege of running a distillery near Parsons, which he failed to operate. Gillespie stated that he went to Tucker county, and seeing a large fruit crop, purchased a tract of mountain land, on which was located a never-failing spring, and obtained permission to put up and operate a distillery. Some of the good people of the neighborhood met at their churches and offered up prayers for the destruction of the distillery.

Gillespie only laughed, and proceeded with preparing to make a run of apple brandy. About the time he had several tubs of crushed apples ready for the still, the prayers of his neighbors to destroy the still having continued almost without ceasing, a steady rain came, causing a large landslide from the steep mountain above to come rushing down, and completely buried his entire outfit, which he was not able to rebuild. His neighbors, who offered up prayers for the destruction of the still, firmly believe and zealously maintain that it was an answer to prayers.

Won the Money on McKinley.

Mrs. Mary Shreve Ransom, the wealthiest woman in Kentucky, has completed arrangements to open a free soup-house and lodging house for the poor in Louisville. This is the application of several thousand dollars won by Mrs. Ransom on the recent elections. She had bets of large size on McKinley being elected, and upon Kentucky going republican. She said at the time the bets were made that the money, if won, was to be used for charitable purposes. She will, therefore, open the soup-house and conduct it during the remainder of the winter.

Three Persons Shot With One Charge.

At Stoneham, in Grimes county, Tex., Hal, the young son of J. O. Stoneham, took down his gun to go hunting and set it beside the door. His mother, opening the door, dislodged the gun. In falling it exploded. A load of buckshot struck Hal in the leg, tearing away the calf. Three shot took effect in the head and breast of a younger child, and one buckshot struck an infant of Mrs. G. S. Crittenden in the jaw, breaking it and lodging near the spine in the back of the head. All the wounds are serious.

Senator Harris' Eye Operated Upon.

Senator Harris, of Tennessee, recently underwent an operation on his eye to relieve the intense pain he had been suffering, and which it was feared might, if allowed to continue, go to the brain. He bravely withstood the operation without taking an anesthetic. For a week Senator Harris had been a great sufferer from the pain which the operation relieved. For five hours he suffered in an excruciating manner, and the operation was performed upon his earnest pleading.

Long-Absent Husband's Return.

Twenty years ago James P. Gooch, a farmer of Waynesburg, Lincoln, Ky., deserted his wife and family and went to Texas. Nothing was heard of him, and he was given up as dead. The other day, however, Gooch, who is now 72 years old, and almost blind, returned, begged his wife's forgiveness, and was taken back into the bosom of his now grown-up family. Gooch is the father of Hon. E. G. Gooch, and the family is one of the best known in that section.

Alabama's Coal Output.

From incomplete reports received the state mine inspector of Alabama approximates the total output of coal in Alabama in 1896 at 5,100,000 tons. The output in 1895 was 5,691,711 tons. The decrease from last year, which was the best in the history of mining in Alabama, is not as great as was expected. Jefferson county held its own, mining about 3,800,000 tons, as against practically the same quantity in 1895.

Joe Morrison, wife and daughter, left Tuesday for Longview, Tex., where they expect to reside in future. If this tide of immigration continues our country will soon be sparsely settled, quite a number having already gone this year; however, we wish them great success in their new homes.

We are grieved to learn of the serious illness of Mrs. R. E. McLean, formerly of this place, but now of Avondale. Mrs. McLean has lived in our midst a number of years and few have made as many warm friends. We earnestly trust she will soon be fully restored to perfect health again.

On last week it was our pleasure to meet and shake hands with quite a number of the good, staunch, citizens of Sterrett, and we were glad to find that they also had imbibed the idea of better times coming and seemed bright and happy. Let us all follow their example and cheer up and go to work with renewed energy and prosperity will be the inevitable result.

Revs. John Barbour, of Birmingham, and W. I. Sinnott of this place organized on last Sunday a Presbyterian church at Montevallo with a membership of fourteen. Messrs. McConaughy, Lee and Rogan were elected trustees and Messrs. A. D. Lee and F. W. Rogan elders. Montevallo has long desired a Presbyterian church and we are truly glad it has been organized.

Phillip Weidner, wife and granddaughter and Geo. Stiving, of Kunkle, Ohio, are visiting the family of W. B. Greek. These gentlemen had a two-fold object in view in their trip, not only of visiting relatives but of viewing this beautiful southland of ours. Notwithstanding they will see it at the worst season of the year we feel assured they can not but be favorably impressed.

The old firm of J. H. Weldon and Son, of Wilsonville, made a voluntary assignment on last Thursday; poor collections being the chief cause. It is thought, however, they will be able to pay every cent of their indebtedness, their assets being $12,000 and their liabilities $4,000. These gentlemen have been in business in Wilsonville for a number of years and have established enviable reputations and we sincerely regret their having met with this misfortune.

On last Sunday Rev. W. I. Sinnott preached one of the most eloquent and impressive sermons the people of Columbiana have ever had the pleasure of listening to, from the text: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." He made our duty so plain regarding how we should give to the Lord that many were deeply impressed. We earnestly trust much good may be accomplished by this sermon and that our people shall be thoroughly awakened to their duties, and more earnestly perform them.

Sheriff Vest was engaged most of yesterday in securing the lumber for the erection of the scaffold for the execution of Walter McAdams, sentenced to hang on Friday. Last week a petition signed by quite a number of citizens was sent to the governor begging that the sentence be commuted to life imprisonment instead of death, but up to this writing nothing has been heard to the contrary and things are being prepared for the execution.

A Boon for Farmers.

Yes, a boon for everybody who cares to save money. If that is your object let us show you how it can be accomplished. Mr. John T. Crawford, of this county, has recently invented and patented a rat, vermin and snake proof building, valuable as a crib, smoke-house, poultry house, grainery, etc., and the saving comes in in two ways. First, by his plan the cost of the right is more than saved in the construction; second, when completed you have a crib that is absolutely rat proof and will remain so as long as it stands. You might put a rat in one of these cribs and it could not stay for want of water, and when he once left he would be gone for good. This is no humbug. There are two of these buildings here in Columbiana that have most emphatically demonstrated that they are all he claims. The saving of what rats destroy will pay for a crib in two years. Further information can be obtained by calling on or addressing,

Wilsonville, Ala.

From Lewis and Four Mile.

We have been having some rough weather during the past two weeks.

J. S. Jackson's infant was seriously burned the 27th ult, and is very slowly improving.

William Otis, little son of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Taylor, is very sick at this writing. We hope for him a speedy recovery.

To the readers of my column and especially to the girls, the writer is an old bachelor and has a quilt containing 16 squares and 160 pieces to complete—2500 pieces. Is there an old maid that can beat that?

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Jackson of near Wilsonville spent Sunday on Four Mile with home folks and others.

If the old adage be true we will have another winter as the ground hog saw his shadow Tuesday.

Geo. Powell has about completed his dwelling and can soon be found to himself again.

J. L. Riddlehead son, Walter, transacted business in Columbiana Saturday.

The oat crop does not seem so bad as injured since the cold weather.

We feel grieved to lose our old Editor, but he has been faithful and has not gone far.

Jack: We hope you will be successful in your telephone undertaking.

Incorporate Wilsonville and the entire county and let's have free schools and educate the young.

Miss Bessie Nimmo, our charming little teacher spent Saturday and Sunday in Wilsonville with home folks.

One of our boys seems very plesking as he has received a letter mailed in Texas.

Two Lives Saved.

Mrs. Phoebe Thomas, of Junction City, Ill., was told by her doctors she had consumption and that there was no hope for her, but two bottles Dr. King's New Discovery completely cured her and she says it saved her life. Mr. Elmer Eggers, 130 Florida St., San Francisco, suffered from a dreadful cold, approaching consumption, tried without result everything else then bought one bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery and in two weeks was well. He is naturally thankful. It is such results, of which there are samples, that prove the wonderful efficacy of this medicine in coughs and colds. Free trial bottles at Parker & Armstrong's drug store. Regular size 50c and $1.00.

Sterrett Stirrings.

Heavy rain the past week.

Grippe has been raging here but has about subsided without any serious results.

J. H. Kincaid went to Sylacauga Sunday to visit his wife's family.

Miss Flora and Master Percy Goodwin, of Oxmoor, who have been attending our school, went home Friday on a short visit.

Miss Mattie Kendrick, of Vincent High School, visited her friend Miss Donaldson Saturday and Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Dudley Furley after a protracted visit to relatives and friends here have returned to their home in W. Va.

Rev. Johnston, of Leeds circuit, preached here Sunday.

Messrs. H. C. Dufosse and J. S. Falkner, of Columbiana, were circulating, promiscuously among us the latter part of last week.

We hope to have a small batch of news for The Chronicle occasionally and will try to give such as the waste-basket will not open its mouth to receive.

DIXIE.

Shelby Stirrings.

We know a certain devout communicant who takes tri-weekly pilgrimages to a social "Mecca" over near some springs bearing the name of this county.

It having been noised about that he is of "standing faith" while she holds to the more reverential rite of kneeling, we find ourselves conjecturing on a compromise method of paying devotions.

Can a fellow get reduced rates on a small pair of license? The tailors are offering inducements on small sized trousers and we believe our probate judge is equally liberal. Answer at once and oblige an economical well-wisher.

Messrs. E. T. Witherby and Chas. Sparks were in Birmingham a few days last week.

We are glad indeed to note Capt. Christian's recovery.

Dr. Oliver, who has been quite sick for some weeks, is reported as being some better.

Sickness and poverty have been the special portions of many we know during the past disagreeable weather. The greater number of us are more avaricious than grateful. How happy we should be when our lots are cast in pleasant places.

P. B. Harrell and family moved to Meridian, Miss., last week where they go to make their home in future.

E. W. Avery has purchased a drug business in Albertville, Ala., and is mixing pills in those parts now.

Our friends may expect us again next week.

Items from Creswell.

Rain is plentiful in this section and the farmers are not so tired of the dust as they thought they were. There is being but little work done towards farming on account of the bad weather.

J. B. Gerhart and wife were up from Columbiana to spend last Sunday with his father and family.

A. C. Harper and little daughter spent Sunday with his wife and brother-in-law at this place.

To be truly happy, one must be loved; and to be loved, one must be lovable, and again, to be lovable, one must in some way be useful, must possess something valuable in the eyes of others.

Miss Belle Coleman is spending a while with her sister, Mrs. G. A. Smith at Irondale, who has been very sick for sometime, but we are glad to note she is improving.

C. E. Bates has just put in operation a grist mill at this place, to which W. S. Bliley and T. L. Bates are adding a shingle mill. This has been a long and much needed industry in our community and we glad these enterprising young men saw fit to invest in it.

Rev. W. J. Ray, of East Lake, will preach at the Baptist church next Sunday at eleven o'clock, and will give the church an answer whether or not he can serve them for the present year. Let all come out and give him a good congregation and thereby encourage him in his field of labor. He is a young man just started in the ministry and we hope him all the success possible.

So many have good resolutions they intend to carry out in the future; how many are doing their best today? One good act done today is worth a thousand in contemplation for some future time.

Mrs. Glaze, who was making her home with her son, G. W. Glaze, near Vincent, died on last Friday morning and was buried in the Tallahassee cemetery near Sylacauga last Sunday. She had lived to a good old age, and had been long in the service of the Master. To the bereaved we extend our most heartfelt sympathies and would direct them to the words of the Master, that "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord," and bid them be of good cheer.

Misses Willie Lipsey and Jennie Babes spent Saturday night with Vincent relatives and friends.

G. W. Wallis, Jr., and Miss Lura Perryman attended the burying at Tallahassee last Sunday.

The Longest Bridge.

Scotland can no longer claim to possess the longest railway bridge in the world. The recently completed bridge over the Danube at Czernavoda obtains this distinction by nearly 3,000 feet. The length of the new structure, exclusive of its approaches, is 13,325 feet, while its principal span over the main channel of the river is 620 and 155 feet respectively. The remaining spans extend over some nine miles of low-lying land, which for several months of the years is completely submerged.

"Mama has just gone across the street, ma'am," said the demure little 6-year-old to the caller.

"Did she say when she'd be back?" asked the lady.

TWO OF A KIND.

The Man with "One Gallus" Tells a Fresh Horse Story.

His Trials and Tribulations Behind "Old Spot"—How He Lost the "Most Loveliest Girl in the Settlement"—Wilder Casey's Gray Mule.

When Andy Lucas came by our house one day last week and rid up to the horse rack on a little flea-bitten gray filly my thoughts flew backwards to one swingin' cold winter night a little better than 20 years ago. All I had to do was to set my eyes and think a few stanzas, and once more

I was drivin' the gamest and fastest horse that ever flung a shoe or left his track in all the regions round. Once more I was sailin' down the old stage road in a spankin' new buggy with the gone-byest most loveliest girl that ever run a reel or jumped a jig in the old settlement I do reckon. Once more I was mixin' and minglin' with a gorgeous big crowd of boys and girls at a break-down dance over there in the stump hills. And then once more I driv' home through a streak of weather which was cold enough to freeze the tail off of a brass monkey—the saddest and the maddest youngster in 17 states and territories.

"Old Spot," the Horse.

"The little flea-bitten gray which now belongs to your wife's husband is a granddaughter of old Spot," says I to Andy—who naturally of course that brings on more talk.

In my day and generation I have had horses on top of horses, but for general road work—for speed and bottom and stayin' qualities old Spot was the gamest and the best one of them all. He was a strawberry roan—built from the ground up—with a big white spot in his left flank. From pure nigger luck I had got the horse in a trade with a Kentucky drover, and better and better, faster and faster every day the good Lord sent so long as he looked to me for his corn and fodder. By gracious, on a smooth hard road you could hear his hoofs pop for a mile away when he hit the ground with his feet!

It is the naked truth—for I would mortally hate to tell anything else in regards to a horse—that nobody ever driv' up behind me whilst I was drivin' old Spot. We would sometimes meet people and pass people along the road, but when I onest started anywhere with that horse nobody would overtake us.

And by and by that winter—when the crops had turned out bully and I bought myself rich with one of these close-built buggies—there came a livin' piece of horseflesh in the country that could pass us by, and there came a young lady in the settlement but what was more than willin' to ride in a nice new buggy behind old Spot.

So consequently when the party came off that time at old man Berry Ringstaff's, over there in the hills, I put right in, I did, and made my engagements with Miss Callie Hickman, with the general understandin' that I would drive old Spot to my new buggy, and we could knock the shine off of anything the country might turn out. And Miss Callie—well, she traded with me on the spot.

Right then Miss Callie was another fellow's sweetheart, and nobody didn't know that any better than me. Her and Bob Travis had been gettin' along powerful sweet and swimmin' for two years past and threatenin' to get married all the time. But that didn't make a blessed bit of difference with me. I was foot loose and fancy free, as Aunt Nancy Newton calls herself, and my only chance was to keep company with some other fellow's calico and ribbons, or turn old Spot in the paster and stay at home.

Now then. On our way to the party that night me and Miss Callie we soon got real friendly and familiar like. I tried my level blindest to do some old-fashion courtin' and carryin' on, but she was just the least bit skittish and pulled on the bit considerable. She finally at last owned up to it that she always did think a pile of me, but she had given her hand to Bob, and she must let him take her heart along with it. Come to find out, and by gracious they had already seen the day and laid in some of the wedding fixments. Man, sir, never would I have thought it up to that time but I'd be thought if it didn't make me feel plum sick for Miss Callie to be tellin' me how close she was to steppin' off with Bob Travis. The moon was shinin' bright like day. I could see her face peepin' forth from the wrappings and trappings and by gatties I did think in my soul that she was the prittiest, the neatest and the most sweetest thing that ever wore clothes. Up to that time I never did have no real serious thoughts in regards to Miss Callie, but somehow it was mighty hurtin' on me to hear her talk so kind and lovin' like about another fellow.

Well, the general circumstance of the calamity was that I had fell heels over appetite in love with Bob Travis' sweetheart. And that was all, white people. I didn't have no better sense, and I didn't do a blessed thing but pitch in and tell her so.

But the game was "braced."

Naturally of course I can't now recollect for certain what Miss Callie said that night in respondin' back to my burnin' words, but anyhow she made a few scatterin' remarks to the general extent that I was just in time to be too late. I tried to hold her little hand in mine, but got busted on the first rattle out of the box. I next tried to steal a kiss, but slipped and fell before I got to first base. I thought I might maybe take my arm and gently keep the wind from blowin' her cloak off, but once more I run up again a braided game, as it were.

But when we got to the party a tremendous pleasant change soon come over the general lay of the land. Bob Travis had got his back up and was teamin' mad—not mad with me to hurt, but plum pizen mad with Miss Callie. He danced with every girl on the floor but her, and she danced with all the boys exceptin' him. As for me, I danced around promiscuous—first with one girl and then another, but Miss Callie was my mainest partner, and I was tickled most to death at Bob.

Finally at last Miss Callie up and told me on the sly that Bob Travis needn't be swellin' around and making such a tremendous good fish of himself—there was just as good fish in the creek as had ever been caught out, and she didn't give the snap of her finger, nohow. Then all of a sudden like—from pure spite and devilment, I reckon—she promised to be my sweetheart forever and a day, and said she would prove it to me as we went on back home that night.

In the main time the fiddlin' and the dancin' went on, and from general appearances, I reckon everybody had a felonious good time. But I was forever glad when the fiddler struck off Home, Sweet Home, and the party broke up. Miss Callie had made me a promise, and said she would prove it true. I was waitin' and wishin' for the proof.

As the night went by the weather had got colder and colder. When by and by I got hooked up ready to start the ground was froze a foot deep, and there was frost on the broad bosom of the earth like snow on a trash pile.

So Busy and So Mad.

As we driv' off towards home old Spot riz on his hind feet two or three times, and then it did look to me like he was settin' naturally split the earth wide open and scootin' the native air. It was then nine miles home, or maybe a little better, but old Spot hit off 30 or 40 feet at every stride. Up hill and down hill—over the rough places as well as smooth ground—he went down after his knittin' like it was a race for blood and death, and all the pullin' I could do but only held him smooth and steady in his wild and furious pace.

Now, when I have got to go somewhere in a big hurry or by my lone self, I do love a fast horse, and old Spot didn't shake my nerves a little bit. I knowed, daddie him, that I could ride as fast as he could travel. Yet there was one time when I didn't want to ride so infernal fast. Miss Callie had told me she would be my own and onlyest, and promised to give me the proof on our return back home—which on that particular night the proof of the puddin' was to hug and kiss the girl.

But, daddie the luck, I didn't have no chance and no time to do a blame thing but hold that horse on the ground and keep him in the big road. I couldn't spare so much as one hand, and by gracious I needed both eyes on my work to keep from runnin' into a smashup. I thought maybe after goin' a few miles at that furious lick old Spot would slow down and give me a little chance to pay my double-breasted regards to the most loveliest girl in the settlement. But not him—nary time owest. Instead of that, it would seem like he got fresher and fresher, and faster and faster with every mile he bit off on the way towards home. How I did wish from the bottom of my heart that somebody would come along with a lazy mule—or even a blind steer that would work in harness—and make a pass at me for a swap.

And what was worse and still more of it, Miss Callie she was skeered nigh unto death. She didn't say nothin', but I stole a look at her here and there, and bless the heavens if she want as white as a sheet. I was too daddieblasted infernal busy drivin' that fool horse to do anything more than talk a little, and the girl was too bad rattled even to talk. She was lookin' to be throwed out and killed every minit, and I don't really think she caught her breath more than once in every two miles. Consequently she wouldn't even say she loved me—she wouldn't even say she thought more of me than anybody else—daddie him, it wouldn't say nothin'.

When we got to the Hickman place, I driv' up to the front gate, and whilst old Spot was dancin' and prancin' and plungin' in back and forth, Miss Callie picked her chance, jumped out of the buggy, said good-by in a hurry and scooted in the house.

"Swapped Spit" and Made Up.

You ought not to think it, but that was the last time I ever saw Miss Callie Hickman in the flesh. The next time I saw her she was Miss Bob Travis, and as shy of me as a three-year-old not even bridewise. You see I didn't go over to the Hickman place to renew my acquaintance right away immediately the next morning, and first thing I knowed Bob had been over there and braced the game once more. It would seem like he was meek and full of repentance and so was she. Whereas they swapped a little spit, as it were, and made up.

But I will die believin' that I missed about half of my unworthy life just simply because old Spot kept me so overlastin' in busy pullin' and drivin' and stayin' in the road that night. Soon as possible I pitched in and swapped that horse off. And to be blamed square and honest, I got the daylight swindled out of me in the trade. But the more I thought about the scandalous dirty way in which old Spot treated me that night, the madder I got, till I simply couldn't abide with him any longer.

For the Good He Has Done.

That night I was tellin' Aunt Nancy Newton about the little flea-bitten gray which Andy had rid over to our house, and then from the best of my recollection, I told her the story of my trials and tribulations with old Spot.

"Well, Rufus, do you know that puts me in mind of the Wilder Casey and her old gray mule," put in the dear, delightful old soul.

I am always tremendous glad when somethin' puts Aunt Nancy in mind of somebody else, and I didn't do a blessed thing but lay low and listen.

"One day along in the Christmas I went over to spend the day with the widder, and whilst there I couldn't keep from taking notice of her old gray mule, which they call his name Pete. You recollect that mule, Rufus, and you recollect when old man Watts Casey bought him as a four-year-old. That was 20 years ago, come next fall, and at that time Pete was a beauty, but as wild and tricky as they ever got to be."

"You will likewise recollect, Rufus, that inside of three months from that time we had a sad and sudden funeral in the settlement. Old man Casey was drivin' Pete to his buggy one day, when, bless goodness, the mule got skeered and run away and throwed the old man out and broke his neck."

"Well, then, after that the widder she kept Pete, and for years and years he was a mighty good mule for general farm work. But he is now old and plum played out—don't scarcely yearn his salt, to say nothin' about corn and fodder. So I up and ask the widder why in the round world she didn't sell old Pete dirt cheap on a credit, or give him away, and be shed of him."

"And what do you reckon she said, Andy?"

Rufus? She loved that whilst Pete was old and stov' up and no account for work, somehow she felt like she was bleedin' to keep him and love him for the good he had done.

"At onest I remembered that Pete killed old man Casey. Now whilst I don't reckon the widder meant it in that way, what she said hit me in a funny place, and it was a good time of year for me to laugh a little, anyhow."

RUFUS SUNDERS.

BOY "HOUSEMAIDS."

What Would Result from Their Presence in English Households.

Outside certain palaces in India is a wall on which are seen imprinted in red paint the hand-prints of the queens as they rode to the Sattoe. Something not unlike this rite would be sure to be practiced by one's boy housemaid, but in black rather than in red. Imagine turning down one's bed to find two or three fine thumb-nails, or maybe a whole hand, silhouetted in coal-dust on one's sheets. And then think of the orgy which would take place when the boy "turned out" the drawing-room.

The mystic process is not unlikely to diminish one's collection of china even when practiced by a woman. Think of the pandemonium produced by a boy—vases destroyed and sofas overturned—and, raging through the chaos of his own creation, his broom home aloft like a battle ax, the boy housemaid.

The picture called up of "the stair-rod and silver day" is not less harrowing. How a strong and willing boy would "stove" in the sides of the old Caroline drinking cups, wrench the ornamental rings off the punchbowl and make the great sugar carter stand all awry. The stairrods might come out but, would they ever go back? But there is no use in pursuing the matter further. We leave the boy housemaid before he attempts to lay the cloth for dinner; nor will we endeavor to canvass the fate of that household which should attempt to have a whole staff of boy servants. Yet such houses there must be if we are to adopt Mrs. Hayes' advice. One boy could "do for" a family of ten, unless, indeed, by inducing suicide. The big families must have a couple of boy housemaids and a boy parlormaid, and even a boy "up-and-down girl."

But think for a moment what would come of a servants' hall of boys. Canning, speaking of the meetings of the directory, describes "the frequent inkstand hurtling through the air." In such a servants' hall as that of which we speak it would be the chairs and knives and forks that would hurtle. Each course would be a free fight and legs of mutton would have to be barred because of the easiness with which a free-spirited boy could use them as a club. No, we shall not help ourselves by taking to boy housemaids.

There is a great deal of nonsense in all this talk of the badness of servants. Of course there are bad servants, just as there are bad mistresses, and always will be, but in spite of that the normal housemaid and parlor maid are very efficient. They have the passions of their kind; but if they are not worried by impertinent suggestions as to their religious views, their matrimonial intentions and the form of headgear, coiffure and costume affected by them out of office hours they are very efficient. We doubt, indeed, if the world can anywhere produce anything more efficient in the way of service than that rendered by the capable British maid servant. She has her feelings and her rights, but she is neither a thief nor a sloven, and knows how to respect herself and her mistress. After this is said we to decline on a boy of 16 with dirt-begrimed hands, a smutty face and a love of mischief for its own sake found otherwise only in the ape or the jack-daw?"—London Spectator.

ABOUT WHEELBARROWS.

Made in Many Different Styles for a Wide Variety of Uses.

It might seem that a wheelbarrow was a very simple thing, but wheelbarrows are made in many different styles and for a wide variety of uses. Wheelbarrows are made of wood, of iron and of steel. Much the greater number are made of wood, but the number of metal wheelbarrows used is all the time growing, and among these the proportion of steel wheelbarrows is constantly increasing.

The wheelbarrows of which the greatest number are sold are of the kinds used by contractors on canal and railroad work. Next to these in numbers sold are the wheelbarrows made for mining uses, and after them come the wheelbarrows made for farm purposes. And there are wheelbarrows especially made for sawdust, for oysters, for sand, and for stone; wheelbarrows for chemical works, and wheelbarrows made to carry leaves in, and wheelbarrows for green brick and for dry brick, and wheelbarrows for malt, and for corn, and for staves or bark, and wheelbarrows for pig metal, and for coke, and for mortar.

Most wheelbarrows have but one wheel, but some are made with two wheels, and some with three, and some with four; and there are wheelbarrows that are made with springs; and there are some kinds of stone barrows that are made without legs. Many of the regular styles of wheelbarrows are made in various sizes, and wheelbarrows are also made for special uses.

A great many thousands of wheelbarrows are used in this country and other thousands are exported. The United States sends wheelbarrows to all the Spanish-American countries and to South Africa and Australia. — N. Y. Sun.

Railroad Laws in Japan.

It has happened in Europe that individuals have thrown themselves before an advancing train in the hope of recovering substantial damages from the railroad companies. In Japan such an attempt would be futile. The Japanese argue that, since the train cannot get out of the way, men must, and the father of a child killed by an engine was fined heavily for allowing his child to cross the line while a train was approaching. In like manner the owner of a cow was punished for allowing the bovine to commit suicide by charging an express.—Chicago Chronicle.

Unconscious Flattery.

Kidney Trouble and Its Effects.

The Word of an Old Gentleman of Mattoon, Ill.

From the Commercial, Mattoon, Ill.

Mr. William J. Winingham is a well-known and venerable gentleman of Mattoon, Illinois. Seventy-five years ago Mr. Winingham was born in Ashboro, North Carolina, and lived until 1866, when he removed to his present residence.

When only thirty-one years of age the old gentleman says he began to be afflicted with nervousness and cramps, which in later years developed into urinary, or perhaps kidney trouble, of so violent a character that it was no uncommon thing for him to void a gallon in a night, exuding through the pores being absolutely unknown. To a reporter who visited the old gentleman, on a number of occasions, he made the following statement:

"I suffered for all those long years with intense pain in the back, nervousness and from the passing of large quantities of water. This was undoubtedly a form of diabetes, and so described by my physicians of whom I had many. Strychnine and nitre and many other remedies were tried, as well as change of climate, but nothing did me any good. I was so horribly nervous that I could not lift, drink, or eat, and my mouth if there was not a handle attached to it. A great part of the time I was confined to bed. The commencement of my disease was in 1846, when I had a bad attack of 'Southern fever' in North Carolina.

"About three years ago I read an advertisement of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and thought I would try them, as they might do me good. I soon began to get relief, and by the time I had taken eight boxes I was curiously cured. Now my nervousness has left me, the flow of water is normal, and the pores of my skin perform their duty as well as when I was a boy, and I perspire as freely as any one.

"I have recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People to a number of people, and have heard from many of them that they have been greatly benefited. I shall always continue to speak in their praise whenever I have an opportunity, for I recognize that their effect upon me was little short of miraculous.

(Signed) "WM. J. WINNINGHAM."

Witness: WILLIAM TABOR.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are about as specific for iron deficiency, peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sickly cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. COLUMBIANA, FEB. 18, 1897.

The Illinois Steel Company last week made a cut of $17 per ton in the price of steel rails. Should this cut remain we would likely soon have some new railroads built.

It is now a certainty that Hon. H. Clay Evans will be postmaster general in McKinley's cabinet. He is a man of fine reputation and believed to be thoroughly fitted for the position.

Governor Johnston last week appointed James Crook to the presidency of the railroad commission to succeed H. R. Shorter whose time had expired. Mr. Crook has served in this capacity before and has proven himself fully competent.

General Joe Shelby, a southern hero of the civil war, died at his home in Adrian, Missouri, February 13th. General Shelby won great honors by his chivalry and patriotism during the late war and came out universally admired by friends and foes. His death will be greatly mourned.

At a meeting on last week of the trustees of the Washington and Lee University, they unanimously elected Postmaster General Wm. L. Wilson president. Mr. Wilson is a man of great learning and ability and the college is to be congratulated upon this valuable acquisition.

An exchange says every paper in the state should publish the fact that burnt corn is a sure cure for hog cholera. It was first discovered by burning a pile of corn belonging to a distillery. It was thrown to the hogs and eaten by them. Before that a number of them had been dying each day, but the disease immediately disappeared. It is so simple a remedy that it can be easily tried.

We see it stated that the English people are getting greatly worried over the cheapness with which Alabama iron can be produced. They seem to think that unless a check is soon made our iron will control the markets of the world. This is certainly encouraging news and should inspire the iron manufacturers of our state to endeavor to prevent such a check being effected.

A Chicago dispatch says: All the mills of the Illinois Steel Company's works at South Chicago are running at full blast, for the first time in many months. Nearly 3000 men returned to work. Wages all along the line were cut 10 to 15 per cent. The Bridgeport works, which employ about 2500 men, are expected to resume soon, with a reduced wage scale similar to that of the South Chicago plant.

A college has a right to feel proud that has given its diploma to one president of the United States, two vice-presidents, one chief justice of the United States supreme court, four associate justices, seventeen members of the cabinet, twenty-five governors, 117 judges of state courts, 150 members of congress, seventeen ministers of foreign countries, not to mention thousands of educated men in all the learned professions. That is the handsome record of Princeton university.—Boston Herald.

A New England cotton manufacturer admits that the south has every advantage in the manufacture of cotton except in skilled labor. New England has the advantage in that respect, and it has that advantage by virtue of its textile schools. The legislature of Massachusetts has just made a handsome appropriation for textile schools. The Alabama legislature should take the hint. A textile school in connection with the Girl's Industrial school at Montevallo would be of incalculable advantage to the state.

There is a great deal of excitement here in Dallas over the report that Governor Johnston has promised to a certain man county treasurer before the bill has passed both houses creating such an office. Governor, don't do it. You have too many friends here in Dallas to thus trample upon the right of petition. You owe something to Dallas. Your friends here claim the right to be heard. Your subsequent action in making the appointment will prove whether or no the above report is true. For the sake of your good name and for the sake of your friends here in Dallas, we hope it is not true. The people of Dallas demand to be heard as to who shall be county treasurer.—Selma Times.

So long as republican leaders such as John Sherman cling to the greenbacks because they are "relies of the war," the one thing needed most of all in the financial system of the country, a reformed banking system will be deferred. What we need is a banking system that will keep the currency of the country most evenly distributed, and as far as possible prevent its congestion in the very few monetary centers of the country. But this much needed reform cannot be obtained so long as partisan and sectional prejudices are the ruling influences. This reform must come through the patriotic action of men willing to drop prejudices and vote in the best interests of the people as a whole.—Mobile Register.

MONTEVALLO BOOMING.

A special to the Advertiser of the 12th, from Montevallo says: "Montevallo will have a building boom as soon as the weather opens up favorably. Among the parties who are to build are Wm. Lyman, P. J. Kroell, Jno. McMath, C. C. Vandegrift, Dr. E. G. Givhan, Capt. Jno. B. Randall, of Calera, Mrs. Millie Tinnon, of Dallas, Tex., besides the making anew of many old houses.

Three nice brick stores are also to be built by Messrs. Geo. Kroell, H. C. & W. B. Reynolds and C. L. Meroney. They are now looking for a contractor to burn them 400,000 brick.

The cotton receipts at this place are greater for this season than any time for twenty-five years.

Capt. T. S. Plowman is here today and made demand on Dr. J. W. Pratt for a copy of the poll list at the last election, and which was in possession of Pratt as one of the managers. Captain Plowman's request was refused. No regard was paid to the election law and it is more than probable this box will be thrown out.

The Industrial School, by its new name, the "Alabama Polytechnic Institute for girls," continues to expand and flourish. The matriculates now number 215 and several more are expected this week. Much has been said and written about this new institution, but as the representatives of so many families from all over the State are here, I feel that news from this school will not be unwelcome. The girls are certainly a happy and healthy set. I have seen any number of them who have gained as much as twenty pounds in weight. The conditions seem to agree with them all and not a serious case of sickness among them has occurred.

CLEVELAND'S MUSEUM.

This is "clearing-up-preparatory-to-moving" time in the Cleveland household, and the head of the family finds his attention called from bothersome Cuban complications and Queen Lil to the more important business of getting rid of a garret full of trash, gifts from admiring and office-seeking Americans which have been accumulating since 1893. And now that it is suspected that the President may have something valuable to give away, others of the dear people who had nothing to do with augmenting the accumulation are being heard from in request for keepsakes.

Grover Cleveland's lasting fame as a fisherman and duck-hunter has caused hundreds of folks to send him all kinds and conditions of guns, game baskets, cartridge belts, decoy ducks, fishing rods, nets, reels, lines, bobs, hooks and sinkers, as well as jackets, hats, boots and other articles needed in hunting in marshes. During the campaign he was the recipient of left hind feet from graveyard rabbits, luck stones and hoodoo bags until the attic carried a scent that was loud and lasting.

The court folk, having heard that a grand distribution is to take place, are losing no time in specifying what they would like to have out of the heap as mementoes of their "great and good friend."

The marsh hunters of North Carolina have filed claims to the decoy ducks that so exasperated Private Secretary Thurber's patience, and the remarkable gun that carried far with salt.

The Virginia farmers have heard that the White House kennels contain some scores of hunting hounds and coon dogs which the President will not take to Princeton owing to the recent increase in the dog tax, and they have filed an early bid.

The fishermen and weather-beaten tars of Buzzard's Bay are using their influence with Thurber to obtain for them the left over bait bottles.

The household servants are feasting their eyes on toilet articles and perfume, which are likely to come their way, while Jerry, the coachman, is anticipating some solid comfort in the cigars, which no one has had the courage to sample.

THE TAX COMMISSIONERS.

From the Mobile Register.

Governor Johnston has appointed Hon. W. J. Wood, of Florence, Ala., state tax commissioner under the law recently passed by the legislature. William J. Wood was born in Lauderdale county, Ala., and is the eldest son of General S. A. M. Wood, of Tuscaloosa, who died in 1891. He has from time to time been entrusted with positions of trust and honor by the people of this state and elsewhere. He was a student at the University of Alabama during the war. He filled the position of county solicitor of Lauderdale county for many years. He was state senator for the district composed of Lauderdale and Limestone counties for four years. He was afterward probate judge of Lauderdale county. Judge Wood removed from the state about 1886 to Evansville, Ind., to accept employment with the Louisville and Nashville road. He continued in their employ many years and was elected third vice president of that company in 1890 and removed to Nashville, Tenn. This position he held several years, but resigned and returned to Alabama and was elected receiver of the Florence Land Company, which position he now holds.

Many years ago—way back in the forties—a girl kneaded bread with her gloves on, and some editor, writing about the matter, remarked: "We also need bread with our shoes on, with our pants on, with all our clothes on; we feed it badly, too, and if our delinquent subscribers do not shortly pay up we will need it without any pants on at all."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Business improvement continues in many industries and in nearly all sections. The cotton factories and woolen mills of New England are increasing their working force; a great steel mill is to be constructed in Birmingham, Ala., as speedily as possible; the Westinghouse Electric Company, of Pittsburgh, has received orders for $500,000 worth of new work within the last ten days, and the builders of locomotives and railway cars are receiving the largest contracts they have had in several years. There is no boom in business, but there is undeniably a steady, solid and constantly increasing change for the better. The improvement is general in its scope, and there is every reason to believe that it will be substantial and long-continued.—New York Mail and Express.

The stealage by state, city and county officials, by bank officers and employees, by agents, and by forgers, etc., is said to have been for the year just passed at the rate of $788,826 per month, or $9,465,921 for the year. This is small stealage as compared with that of some of the previous years, but is nevertheless above the average. The greatest amount in any one year was $25,234,000 in 1894. The smallest amount was $2,240,000 in 1888. The record by states for 1896 shows that there were no defalcations or losses by official stealing in the following states: Alabama, Florida, Idaho, Maine, Virginia, Wyoming, Arizona, Utah and the Indian Territory and Alaska.

The Henry County Weekly says Turner Johnston, a Clayton county negro, has been married 21 times. He is 71 years old, and all of his wives are dead, except his present one, who is only 18 years of age. He is the father of 42 children, and is still a vigorous and lively old man.

Some of our young men are highly indignant over valentines received. This clearly exemplifies the old saying that "truth hurts."

We have just printed a large supply of waive notes—a magnificent form that will hold forever and one day longer, and are nicely bound in books of fifty notes each.

The spelling match on last Friday night was a great success and great numbers manifested their interest by attending. Miss Minnie Adams carried off the honors of the evening by downing the entire school.

Large crowds assembled in town last Friday to witness the hanging which was set for that day but were all disappointed by the governor allowing him another week that he might have time to more thoroughly investigate the case.

We received a very beautiful valentine from one of our Montevallo friends representing us as a very fine vocalist and it is evident from the features of the photograph that the donor has had the pleasure of hearing us exhibit our skill along that line. We return sincere thanks to this unknown friend.

On last Thursday R. F. Johnston and son, of near Highland brought over and placed in the custody of Sheriff Vest, Bob Garner, accused of the murder of S. P. McKnight on Monday. This will likely result in another "neck tie party" as the accused acknowledged having committed the crime. We are strongly in favor of hanging for capital crimes and think if this rule was strictly adhered to murders would be less frequent in our land.

Deputy Sheriff Norris arrested and placed in jail, on Monday afternoon, Jesse and John Holt, accused of appropriating goods belonging to the Columbian Mercantile Co. without their knowledge or consent. A pair of pants belonging to the aforesaid company was found upon one and a shirt upon the other. These negroes have been suspected as having slack ideas regarding the rightful ownership of property for some time but no definite proof could be obtained. We hope they will reap their just deserts and that others of like dispositions will profit thereby.

Valentine Day.

The sending of valentines is a very old custom, says The Philadelphia Inquirer, and some authorities trace it back to pagan Rome, when, at the February feasts in honor of Pan and Juno, the names of young women were put into a box, from which they were drawn by chance by young Romans in search of wives. However this may be, all through the age of chivalry St. Valentine's day was devoted to the exchange of love missives. Poets wrote of it; a princess built a palace in Italy which was named "Valentine" in honor of the saint, and at balls and tournaments knights and ladies wore the favors which had been sent to them on St. Valentine's day. But times change and we change with them. The days of chivalry are past and gone; knights no longer break a lance in honor of some fair lady, and the lover of today does not write "a woful sonnet to his mistress' eyebrows." The old custom associated with the 14th of February is also being largely forgotten, and the day is made the occasion for sending through the mails things that are dignified by the name of "comic valentines." The old custom was a delightful one, and it had a tinge of romance about it. It is to be regretted that it is now looked upon so lightly, and that advantage is taken of it to send scurrilous verses and vulgar lampoons to persons against whom the sender has a grudge, and sent, too, without his being honest enough to disclose his individuality. The old fashion was the best, after all.

Mr. Brown, of Colbert county, has offered a bill exempting cotton factories from the payment of state taxes for a period of ten years, provided the amount invested exceeds $50,000. This measure will meet the heartiest approval of every citizen in the state who is desirous of seeing Alabama develop as a manufacturing state. We must, however, confess that we fail to see why wood works, flouring mills, woolen manufacturing enterprises should not be included. It is quite evident that the establishment of any industry gives employment to labor, that employment of labor creates a demand for houses, that a demand for homes not only creates an advance of real estate values, but at the same time demands the building of additional houses, all of which like a continuous chain, link by link, increases the taxable value of the property of the state. Not only is this true, but words of welcome fall as impressively upon the ears of projectors as upon the ears of the hungry and cold. To say that the state of Alabama extends such a welcome, that it has opened its doors to industries, and asked them to enter therein, will be far reaching in its beneficial effect.—Huntsville Tribune.

State Commissioner of Agriculture I. F. Culver has issued the following statement: "I am receiving letters from parties in the North and West inquiring after lands of Alabama as to prices, the number of acres in a body, the soils, etc. If there is a party or parties in the state wanting to sell lands and they will send me their address, I will put them in communication with those parties as they write me letters of inquiry.

The honorable justice court of beat 15, was in session last Saturday, and, by the way, Lawyer J. R. Beavers, of Columbiana, was in attendance dispensing points of law to the court.

Miss Belle Chancellor, of Cresswell, visited her father, E. Cosper here Saturday and Sunday.

G. M. Billrey and family, of Vincent, were up Sunday visiting the family of W. H. Falkner.

Mr. Editor: The next time you see Joe F. Johnston, I think they call him governor now, tell him that blue-eyed Dick Clark is watching him and he had better look sharp how he signs up back tax-laws. The people will look for men to repeal that law two years hence. Judge Wood is kicking like a bay steer because the people are criticizing the unjust law. It is no doubt a fat job for the judge, therefore he contends for the law. It was thought that Captain Joe could run the state government without having 67 supernumerary feathers stuck on his cap, but he stuck 'em on.

Wilsonville Warblings.

Every thing may stop but drummers will come.

The Wilsonville society is growing to be very musical here of late.

We are very sorry to say that W. R. Smith has left us contemplating a new place of business, we will miss him very much. Weep not girls perhaps he will return sometime to make this his home.

To our surprise John Weldon, of Howard College, came over last Friday and returned to his place of study Sunday afternoon. We are looking forward to the time when he will come to go no more; also one of his relatives.

Some of our young men were so fortunate as to be with some of the Harkersville young ladies Sunday afternoon. They seem to think that Wilsonville is dead, by what reason, why because Bourgtois had ceased to write they say it is because he can get no news from such a place. I must say that it is a mistake, but the trouble is the correspondent is not ambitious enough to make the reports as they should be made.

Rev. J. M. McCord preached two interesting sermons last Sunday at the Baptist church, and the Earnest Workers met with a nice program in the afternoon.

A shooting took place among the negroes while at a supper in the northern part of town last Saturday night, one received the consequences by letting his knee be the lodging place of a 38 pistol ball. These negro suppers are a nuisance to this community and I trust that the officers of Shelby county will take up this matter and make an effort to stop these Saturday night fests.

Mixed Metaphors.

Mo, fellow-citizens, these trusts are not to be trusted. If they were shipwrecked on an uninhabited island, they would soon have their hands in the pockets of the naked savages, and take all from those who have nothing. They have cut the wool from the sheep that lays the golden eggs until they have pumped it dry. It does not take a wise man to see along the untravelled path of the future the footprints of an unseen hand. Then let us rally around the ship of state as she marches through the land.

A Valuable Prescription.

Editor Morrison, of Worthington, Ind., "Sun" writes: "You have a valuable prescription in Electric Bitters, and I can cheerfully recommend it for Constipation and Sick Headache, and as a general system tonic it has no equal." Mrs. Annie Stehle, 2625 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago, was all run down, could not eat or digest food, had a headache which never left her and felt tired and weary, but six bottles of Electric Bitters restored her health and renewed her strength. Prices 50 cents and $1.00. Get a Bottle at Parker & Armstrong's Drug Store.

The physician was surprised to find the head of the household at the door with a shotgun.

"That there medicine you give my wife, she says is makin' her feel like a new woman. And I want you to understand that no new woman business goes in this house. First thing I know, she'll be out makin' speeches." Washington Star.

"Doctor, something is the matter with me. Sometimes my mind is a perfect blank, and my memory constantly fails me. I wish you would treat me."

"I will. But in view of the peculiar nature of your case, I shall want my fee in advance."—Harper's Bazar.

"I have called to apply for the position of bill collector," said the sharp nosed man who stood in the doorway. "I understood you wanted one."

"That is exactly what we want," said the business man. The last man we had seemed to be only a bill presenter."—Indianapolis Journal.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gauderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitancy in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church, at Rives Junction, she was brought down with Pneumonia succeeding La Grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption, and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free at Parker & Armstrong's drug store. Regular size 50c and $1.00.

CHURCH AND CLERGY.

Mr. Gladstone is disappointed at the small sale of his edition of Bishop Butler, only 2,000 copies having been sold.

Rev. Dr. Benjamin L. Agnew, pastor of the Bethlehem Presbyterian church of Philadelphia, has been elected secretary of the Presbyterian board of ministerial relief.

Gen. Booth has announced that the Salvation Army is to extend its operations over the whole Malay archipelago. The movement will be directed from the army's headquarters in Australia.

It is openly stated that the new English bishop of Peterborough was not appointed for his past services to the church, his learning, or his piety, but because "he had enough money in his pocket to repair the west front of the cathedral."

The cardinal archbishop of Paris has appointed Pere Olivier, the famous Dominican preacher, to the post of Lenten preacher at Notre Dame, vacant by the death of Mgr. d'Hulst, thereby continuing the tradition which connects the great order of "Preaching Friars" with the cathedral pulpit.

The University of Dublin has instituted two examinations for diplomas in the art of teaching. The second, in the practice of teaching, can only be taken by candidates who have had 12 months of practical experience, and who have passed the preliminary examination in theory.

Dr. Temple, says the St. James' Gazette, has started an official campaign on church reform. The new archbishop of Canterbury declares that there are four subjects ripe, or almost ripe, for legislation. In the first place, the benefices bill of last session is to be passed, "is certain to be passed," next year. In the second place, a bill for power to remove incompetent clergymen and put them on a retiring fund is to be "dealt with next session." And the two questions of giving the congregations a voice in the selection of a pastor and the sort of service to be used "will probably come before parliament a couple of years later."

A GREAT STRUCTURE.

It Spans the Harlem River at New York City.

Completion of the New York Central's Four-Track Draw-Bridge and an Immense Steel Viaduct.

One of the most remarkable feats of engineering on record is just completed, and the passenger entering New York from the north now rides over one of the grandest examples of steel railway construction yet accomplished in this age of marvelous results in that direction.

Going south, at One Hundred and Forty-ninth street, the tracks of the New York Central begin to rise gradually, and at One Hundred and Thirty-Fifth street they cross the Harlem river on the new four-track steel draw-bridge, at an elevation of 24 feet above high tide.

This massive structure is remarkable in being the first four-track draw-bridge ever constructed, and is the largest bridge of the kind in the world. It is 400 feet long and weighs 2,500 tons. The draw-bridge is 58 feet 6 inches wide, from center to center of outside trusses, and is carried on three very heavy trusses. Between the central and each of the two side trusses is a clear space of 26 feet, which permits the passage of two sets of double tracks. The floor is corrugated, and the rails are bolted to it on steel tie plates. The trusses of the draw-bridge span are 64 feet high in the center and 25 feet high at each end. At the highest part of these trusses is situated the engine house, which contains two oscillating double-cylinder engines, which turn the draw and can be worked together or separately, so that if one should break down at any time, the other can do the work.

From One Hundred and Thirty-eighth street south the four new tracks run over the steel viaduct to One Hundred and Tenth street, and thence by the stone viaduct to One Hundred and Sixth street, where they strike the level of the present four-track line.

The work of building this massive structure, which is here illustrated, began September 1, 1893, and has continued without cessation until now, and will cost when completed considerably more than $3,000,000. The completion of the new work will permit the opening of all cross streets under the railway and so permit a perfectly free passage for street traffic.

One Hundred and Thirty-eighth street, which has become a great thoroughfare, will be entirely free, as the trains which heretofore crossed it at grade will pass over it at an elevation that will allow street cars and all traffic perfect freedom. At One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street the tracks will cross the street 14 feet above the level of the street, and at this point a magnificent passenger station is to be built, extending from One Hundred and Twenty-fifth to One Hundred and Twenty-sixth street, under the four-track viaduct.

This improvement will be of immense value to the entire state—in fact, to the whole country—as the bridge, being so high above the water, will never have to be opened except when large steamers or vessels with masts are to pass through; all tugs, canal boats, barges, etc., will have ample room to go under the bridge while it is closed.

The Harlem river, having been declared by congress a ship canal, the secretary of war has issued orders that all tugs and barges shall joint their smokestacks and flag-poles, to enable them to pass under the bridge while it is closed. He has also ordered that the bridge shall not be opened between the hours of seven and ten o'clock in the afternoon, except for police, fire or government vessels, the hours named covering the great business traffic in and out of the city, the important through trains arriving and departing during those hours. This will avoid delays, which have been, at times, very annoying, and permit of much faster service than could have been maintained under the old arrangements; and, as speed is one of the principal factors in travel in this age, this feature will prove an important one.

Quite a number of the great improvements which have recently been made in the northern part of the city can be seen from the trains as they pass over the new viaduct. Among them are Grant's tomb, St. Luke's hospital and the buildings of Barnard college and Columbia college, on Morningside Heights, and very soon the grand structure of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine will be observed. Further north, and on the west side of the Harlem river, the now famous speedway is under construction and approaching completion; the magnificent High bridge, Washington bridge, McComb's dam bridge and the viaduct leading to it from the north are works of art, as well as of great utility, under which the trains pass, and on the right may be seen the buildings of the University of the City of New York, Webb's Sailors' home, and hundreds of other new buildings of less importance. North of the Harlem river, on the Harlem division, is the Bronx park, which is to contain the great botanical gardens and zoological gardens of Greater New York, and within a few years this portion of the city will offer attractions which will be unsurpassed in their character by any city in the world.

Greater New York, which is 19 miles wide by 35 miles long, certainly offers to the tourist and seeker after knowledge or pleasure more inducements than any other American city, and few cities in Europe can equal it.

DAUGHTERS OF PRESIDENTS.

Oldest President at the White House Over Half a Century Ago.

There are eight surviving daughters of presidents of the United States, in addition to the three of President and Mrs. Cleveland. Mrs. Letitia Tyler Semple is the eldest of the group and Mrs. Philip Pendleton Dandridge is the next. The former is the daughter of President Tyler, and is living in the Louise home, Washington, D. C. Mrs. Dandridge is the daughter of President Taylor, and presided at most of the white house functions during her father's brief occupancy—a little over a year; she lives in Winchester, Va. The only surviving daughter of President Johnson, Mrs. Martha Johnson Patterson, lives in the old Johnson homestead at Greenville, Tenn. Mrs. Ellen W. Grant Sartoris, the only daughter of President Grant, is now living in this country—since the death of her husband—in Washington, D. C. The only daughter of President Hayes, Miss Fanny Hayes, passes much of the winter in travel, and spends her summer at the Haynes homestead in Fremont, O. Mrs. Mary Garfield Stanley-Brown, the "little Mol-lie" of the Garfield family, lives in Washington during the winter and at the old family homestead in Ohio in the summer. The only daughter of President Arthur, Miss Helen Herndon Arthur, lives in Albany, N. Y., with an aunt, and spends much time in travel. Mrs. Mary Harrison McKee, the only daughter of President Harrison, lives at Saratoga, N. Y., and the Cleveland children, of course, are at their home in the white house.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Ancients Didn't Adulterate Food. Among the Romans the adulteration of food was unknown. They were noted for the purity of all staple articles of nutrition. In this particular they were far in advance of us, with whom the adulteration of food is the rule rather than the exception. With us flour, chalk and plaster of paris are mixed; with bread, alum and sulphate of copper; vinegar, with mineral acids; pickles with copper; tea with Prussian blue; and peppers and spices and many other articles with all sorts of ingredients. If the Romans had the advantage over us in this particular we excel them in the variety of our ailments and in modes of preparation. Of the few things they possessed in common with us asparagus was one. With them, however, the stalks were much larger, three or four not infrequently weighing a pound. It was eaten as with us, with a white sauce. Preparations of pork were similar. Indeed, it is from the Romans that we derive a knowledge of how to make brawn, sausages and blood puddings. The two last were invented in the reign of Tiberius. The puddings were made of pig's blood interspersed with cubes of fat, precisely as they are prepared to-day. Dornice were also considered a great delicacy by the Romans. They were specially fattened and were used as a basis for soup and in the form of sausage and brawn.—N. Y. Sun.

OLD ROCKY.

Short Stories That Come Fresh from the People.

Aunt Nancy Newton with Another "Bad Case of Breaking Out at the Mouth"—Tim Reeves and His Whiskers.

"If it was left with me to live as long as I please—and remain over and tarry around in this wide and wicked world till I get ready to go down into the valleys and the shadows of dry bones—I reckon when the last day comes that old patriot by the name of Methuse-l-u-m, which we hear tell of in the Scriptures, would be a mere kid as compared to me." So said my Aunt Nancy Newton to mother and me one night whilst she was up from the Panther Creek settlement on her Christmas visitation. Mind you, now, it was then way up into the still and solemn hours of night, and I was thinking to myself that I might, as well wind up the clock and set the rat traps and go to bed. But about that time it would seem like Aunt Nancy had took another bad case of breakin out at the mouth, and consequently I couldn't do a blessed thing but lay low and listen.

Tim Reeves and His Whiskers. "Now, you might, maybe, write me up for several different kinds of a fool, Rufus, but I know tremendous well that I ain't all sorts of a fool at the same time," that dear old female lady went on to say. "And that is the way I would want you to write me up if I was a fool enough to sail in and kill myself. "So far I have forgot to tell you all about Tim Reeves, and the sudden and terrible way in which he brung on a funeral procession in the old settlement along in durin of the Christmas. You will recollect, Rufus, that Tim Reeves was a right young man—not more than twenty-two or three, or maybe a little the rise of that. Anyhow, he had just come out upon the carpeted go, and for the last year he had been payin his most fervent and double-breasted regards to Miss Amy Ledbetter—which from all the reports and general appearances in the case, if they had lived, by this time they would be mixin clothes accordin to the Scripture and the law. "But in the meantime Tim had turned him out the longest and most lowliest set of red whiskers I have ever saw on the face of mortal man. Bless gracious, if they didn't flow way down below the brow band of his pantaloons, and then he could take and plat 'em up and they would wrap around his neck three times—which he most in generally always wore 'em that way only when he was going to town or out amongst the female generation. But the people and the places which have knew Tim Reeves and his whiskers in the past will know them now no more forever. "One day Tim turned his whiskers loose and dressed up and drive off to town in his buggy. There was a big party comin off that night down in the Flat Woods, and it would seem like Tim had made his engagements to go and take Miss Amy. But on his return back home that evenin—drivin fast and furious—tanked up to about three sheets in the wind and the other one split—and smokin his pipe as big as life—bless the heavens if he didn't drop some fire which broke out in his whiskers and burnt 'em off as clean as my hand all but one little patch on the left side. And that was huthin to the general circumstance of the calamity. In fightin the fire Tim didn't know for certain what he was doin till he had dropped the lines and the mule pitched out and run away. They tell me that Tim did raise a tremendous big confusion along the old stage road, with his mule runnin away and a prairie fire ragin through his whiskers. Before they quit the mule had throwed Tim outen the buggy and tore the turnout into kindlin wood. From what has since come to pass it is a blessed pity but what Tim had got killed right there in the smashup, for whilst he come through that with no harm done but the ruination of his whiskers, he went on home and didn't do a blessed thing that night but take a scandalous big dose of rat pizen and then keel over and die. "To be certainly of course I can see wherein it was powerful hurtin on poor Tim to lose his lovely red whiskers, and likewise miss a buggy ride with Miss Amy and the party down in the Flat Woods. But all put together he had a mighty little excuse to bring on that singin and slow walkin we had over at the old Ebenezer grave yard on his account.

The Widder and the Molasses. "And for three or four days now old man Seth Marvin he has been sick abed, with one foot in the grave and the other one danglin along the edges, on account of the Widder Jennings and his barrel of fine molasses, and it is now the general wonderment amongst the people why he didn't give up the fight and pass out in the same sad and sudden way in which poor Tim had went," Aunt Nancy went on.

"You must keep in mind, Rufus, that old man Seth never had got married, and he was way yonder the most stingiest man in all that strip of country. He was famous amongst the people from the fact that whensomever a dollar left his hand you could see the print of the eagle there—which at the same time he had money on top of money and money till you couldn't rest. Well, here of late a gay and gorgeous young widder by the name of Miss Jennings had moved her washin down into the settlement from some town way over in Georgy. Bless your soul, I don't know nothin about the widder only from what I could see and hear and pick up on the run, as it were.

"But at any rates, it would seem like the widder had set her trap and fixed the triggers to take old man Seth in out of the wet, and by some hook or mercrook she had played her hand so as to make a pimperfect and variegated fool out of the stingy old thing. One day last week the widder she come sailin along with all her riggins and finery and fixments on and hailed at the Marvins place and called for old man Seth. In the meantime he had went out to the smoke house to draw a jug of molasses which one of the neighbors had sent over to buy, and he had just set the jug down and pulled the peg out when the widder driv up with a great swash.

"Naturally of course old man Seth he forgot everything else and went pellin out to the front gate and responded to the widder. Moreover it didn't take the widder more than two minnits to wrap him around her little finger and make him forget where he was at and what he was doin. The widder, of course she wouldn't tell, and old man Seth didn't know any-thing for certain right then, and so consequently they stayed out there lalla-gaggin and courtin and carryin on. But when the widder got ready to go and drive off up the road, and old stingy Seth come back to his right mind onest more, bless gracious the jug was full and every last bit of the molasses had run out and spilt.

"Well, after that it want in no ways surprisin to me when the news come that the stingy old serapegrace had took sick and went to bed, and raley the great wonderment is why he didn't take somethin pizen and die. No tellin how long it will take him to recover from the loss of that barrel of fine molasses, and as to the widder—well, with old man Seth her cake is all dough hereafterwards and forevermore."

No Robbers on Murder Creek.

A stranger travellin through the settlement one day last week along the old Federal road got skeered out of about seven years' growth and happiness by Red-eyed Bill Travis down there in Murder Creek swamp.

You see they are buildin of a railroad through there and from the way they laid the plans off it strikes the big road for some two or three hundred yards along there in the swamp. They have now throwed up a high bank and put down the cross-ties ready for fillin and finishin the railroad. The main public wagon road had to be cut out new and it makes a circle of somethin better than a mile around through the swamp.

Red-eyed Bill Travis is what you might call an all-around white man, but his eyes are forever and eternally red so as to make you think he has looked too long and lovingly upon the early runnins of the corn. And Red-eyed Bill lives right there on the old Federal road in sight of the Murder Creek swamp.

When the stranger driv by Bill he was out at the lot pushin his plow hands off to the field and had his six shooter buckled on in plain sight of anybody. Out of pure goodness and pity for the stranger Bill stopped him and told him he would better go the new cut road around through the swamp, as they had tore the regular road up terrible in buildin a railroad. The stranger made out like he was powerful glad and thankful, but he had took particular notice of Bill's personal appearances and the weapon he was wearin. So he drive right straight on down the main road toward the swamp.

"Look at that durned infernal idiot," says Bill. "I'll bet, by gattins, he thinks I am drunk and tried to git him to take the new cut road around through the swamp so I could follow him and rob him. I will go and see him safe across the swamp."

With that Red-eyed Bill called for his saddle horse and mounted and rid off down the road. He caught up with the stranger just as he drive up to where the railroad works put in and come to a halt.

"I have come to let you know; dnd burn you, that when I told you to take the new cut road around through the swamp it want in my plans to follow you and kill you and rob you," says Bill, which he was still red-eyed and had his weapon on him.

The stranger he was just as pleasant and polite as a basket of chips to Bill and loved he would turn around and go back and take the new cut road.

"No, I'll be doubly bad burned if you will," says Bill. "Durn your fool pictures, I will have to learn you the difference between a southern gentleman and a highway robber, and I ain't got a blame thing to do but stay right here and make you drive on. Crack your whip now and drive right on across the swamp."

"But how in the round created world can I drive on over these railroad works without a smashup?" says the traveler.

"Don't make a continental durn bit of difference about that," says Bill, layin his hand on the butt of his weapon. "You drive on."

And bless your sweet soul, honey, the stranger he driv on, whilst Red-eyed Bill stood by to see the show out. When the traveler landed on the other side his horse was goin on three legs and one wheel of his buggy had went slap to pieces.

"Now you can go your way and I will go mine," says Red-eyed Bill, as he waved a last farewell at the traveler, "but the next time you pass this way keep it in your remembrance that we don't raise no highway robbers on Murder creek."

News from the Settlement. Everybody and everything around Rocky Creek has been sick off and on more or less here lately. Andy Lucas has made out the sick list this way:

"The horses have got the epizootic, the dogs have got the distemper, the niggers have got the influenways and the townfolks have got the grip, and we plain country folks are havin some most hellatious bad colds."

INSTALLMENT PRICES.

Points to Be Considered by Prospective Purchasers of Wheels.

The public should beware of bicycle dealers who advertise to sell wheels on installments without any advance over the spot cash prices. Such offers are contrary to all accepted business methods, and are deceptive. Most bicycles are listed at a nominally fixed price, which, however, is not an absolutely fixed price, but is one that varies according to the amount the cash buyer is able and willing to pay. Suppose the list price is $100. He who buys on the installment plan pays that price. The cash purchaser gets the same bicycle for $75, $60, or even less. The wiles of the cheap bicycle dealer are many, and the prospective buyer must keep his eyes open or be taken in by one of these easy and alluring methods of buying a low grade bicycle and paying twice as much for it as it is worth. Standard high-grade bicycles have one fair, fixed cash price that is ever the same to all alike, and when they are sold on installments an extra sum is reasonably demanded to cover the accommodation and the added expense of doing a credit business.

An extraordinary story of the credulity of Russian peasants comes from Slayansk, in southern Russia, where a woman whose little ten-year-old girl had sore eyes consulted with a witch doctor and was told to apply gunpowder to the child's eyes and touch it off with a match. MCKINLEY'S POLICY.

How the New Administration Will Regard the Cuban Question.

Every Citizen of the United States Will Have Absolute Protection Even If War with Spain be Precipitated in Consequence.

NEW YORK, Feb. 27.—The Journal prints the following dispatch from Julius Chambers, its staff correspondent at Cleveland, O.:

Intense curiosity exists to know the policy to be pursued regarding Cuba by the incoming administration. I am able to state that policy on the highest authority and in the epigram in which it will be enunciated.

The American Flag Will Protect.

There will not be any meddling with the Cuban insurrection, or any trifling with Spain.

Every citizen of the United States will have the absolute protection of this government if war with Spain be precipitated. The first case of brutality to a citizen of the United States will be followed by immediate and unmistakable action on the part of the administration.

Maj. McKinley is opposed to a recognition of the republic of Cuba, because he maintains that it does not exist, and that the only existing government in Cuba is Spain. The granting of belligerent rights to insurgents, he argues, would relieve Spain to a large extent of her obligations to this government. No claims of American citizens would lie against Spain for the destruction of their property on the island by the insurgents.

Maj. McKinley is equally opposed to armed intervention, holding that conditions justifying such a step do not exist. The president-elect has recently expressed himself in writing to the above effect. The firmness of his attitude on the protection due Americans living or traveling in Cuba is unmistakable. The consul-general at Havana will not appeal to him in vain. President-elect McKinley will order every ship in the navy to Cuban waters, if necessary, to protect the life of a man, woman or child, who has a lawful claim on this government.

A politician close to Maj. McKinley said Thursday afternoon that the president-elect is delighted with the stand taken by Consul-General Lee; that he pronounced it unassailable and just the attitude that he approved. I can not vouch for this, as I can for the statement regarding the Cuban policy of the next president. That I know to be correct.

"Conservatism, on every phase of the Cuban question, except the rights of American citizens. They must and shall be protected," are Maj. McKinley's words.

JUDGE JOSEPH M'KENNA.

The Californian Will Probably be Made Attorney-General.

NEW YORK, Feb. 27.—A Times special from Washington says: A Pennsylvania republican said Thursday that he had received information direct from Canton that there was no doubt there that Judge McKenna, reported to be selected by McKinley for secretary of the interior, would be put in the attorney-general's place, and that if Col. McCook should get into the cabinet it would be as secretary of the interior.

Stocks have not been demoralized, as some expected in view of investigations, but closed at 38 cents higher for trusts and 24 points for railroads. Railroad earnings in three weeks of February have been 5.5 per cent. larger than last year but 8.8 per cent. smaller than in 1892. Chicago east-bound tonnage in three weeks of February has been 265,520 against 208,840 last year, and $20,911 in 1893. Exchanges through principal clearinghouses have averaged for February 7.6 per cent. less than last year.

Failures for the week have been 296 in the United States, against 278 last year, and 50 in Canada against 58 last year.

The Baltimore & Ohio to be Relaid with New Steel Rails.

NEW YORK, Feb. 27.—The purchase of 58,000 tons of eighty-pound steel rails by the receivers of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., at a cost of about $1,000,000, is confirmed by the officers of the company.

It is said that these rails will be placed in the track as soon as possible, and that by fall the tracks between Baltimore and the Ohio river will practically be entirely relaid with new steel rails and new oak ties. As fast as the rail is taken up it will be relaid on the less important branches, or used in extending much-needed sidetracks.

Judge Joseph McKenna.

It is alleged that Mr. McKinley, in reaching his decision to make McKenna attorney general, was influenced by the representations from California and other sections that the American Protective association would be offended if the interior department portfolio should be given to McKenna.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—The senate committee on the District of Columbia yesterday morning ordered an adverse report on the nomination of Francis P. Sands to be commissioner of the district.

DUN'S COMMERCIAL REVIEW.

The Improvement in Business Gradual and Moderate—Setting Thousands of Men to Work, Whose Increased Purchases Will Soon Begin to Swell the Distribution of Goods and Result in Further Development of Trade.

NEW YORK, Feb. 27.—R. G. Dun & Co. say to-day:

Genuine improvement in business does not come with a rush, like the breaking of a great dam. The growth for some weeks past has been more encouraging, because in nearly all lines it has been gradual and moderate. The rupture of the steel rail and other contributions in the iron business has brought out a vast quantity of trade which had been held back, and has set many thousands at work, while the slow but steady gain in other great industries has given employment to many thousands more; but the full effects will not appear until the increased purchases by all these swell the distribution of goods. This comes more slowly and later, but is already apparent. Certainly regarding the future will help it mightily, and is by multitudes expected with strong hope.

It was not to be expected that the excess of exports over imports would continue as large in January as it had been in previous months, and yet it was surprisingly large. The February returns have naturally been less favorable, as cotton exports fall off at this season, and yet the decrease compared with last year is trifling, while the increase in imports, to be expected at this season, has amounted during the past three weeks to only $829,040, compared with last year, or about two per cent. Nothing in the state of foreign exchange indicates that the heavy credits in favor of this country have been liquidated or seriously diminished.

Nothing is yet settled about the price of lake ore for the coming season, but some expert for Mesaba the price of 1895, while others expect a lower price, either being at least 20 per cent. lower than the price of last year. The rapid increase in coke output in the Connellsville region, which is now over 100,000 tons, gives prospect of moderate cost for fuel, and the addition of important furnaces to the producing capacity prevents a large rise in Bessemer pig, which was, nevertheless, advanced ten cents at Pittsburgh with increasing demand.

Purchases of rails estimated at fully 1,000,000 tons within two weeks, whereas the production last year was 1,102,892 tons, and the sales said to be only 800,000, insure employment for the works far ahead, and eastern works are taking desirable contracts at $18 per ton.

Bars are unchanged, but orders for 900 cars by one railway with numerous others increase the demands, and plates are required for two great elevators at Chicago. Important contracts for export continue, and American makers undersell foreign in tin plates by 70 cents, and are selling cotton ties below 75 cents, for which $1.10 was charged by importers a year ago.

With less rapidity, but yet steadily, other industries are gaining. Although brown 4-4 sheetings are an eighth lower and print cloths a sixteenth lower, it is found that several cotton mills are started, not covered by the restriction as to print cloth works, which is carried out. Increasing demand has also started quite a number of woolen mills, including many making dress goods and hosiery. The demand for men's wools is also somewhat better, especially for heavy weights, and there are improving sales of better qualities.

In boots and shoes also, growing belief that prices will not give way has started many more shops, although many jobbers still shrink from the prices asked.

Wheat enjoyed a brief rise, then dropped over three cents, and closed 2 1/2 lower for the week. While western receipts are 40 per cent. smaller than last year, for the past four weeks, Atlantic exports, flour included, in the same weeks, have been 6,340,415 bushels, against 7,043,577 last year, and the exports of corn have been 8,435,552 bushels, against 4,195,293 last year. Cotton rose three sixteenths, though without material change in movement.

Stocks have not been demoralized, as some expected in view of investigations, but closed at 38 cents higher for trusts and 24 points for railroads. Railroad earnings in three weeks of February have been 5.5 per cent. larger than last year but 8.8 per cent. smaller than in 1892. Chicago east-bound tonnage in three weeks of February has been 265,520 against 208,840 last year, and $20,911 in 1893. Exchanges through principal clearinghouses have averaged for February 7.6 per cent. less than last year.

Failures for the week have been 296 in the United States, against 278 last year, and 50 in Canada against 58 last year.

GOLD AND GREENBACKS.

Valuable Find in an Old Joint of Stovepipe Among a Dead Man's Effects.

MADISON, Ind., Feb. 27.—John H. Means, an aged farmer in Shelby township, this county, died on the 14th, and Thursday, while the appraisers were taking an inventory of household effects, they came across some old stovepipe in the garret, when one joint with both ends plugged with old stove lids was given a kick. Hearing a rattle, it was examined and revealed a tin box which contained $3,000 in gold and greenbacks.

CONFLICTING REPORTS.

One Declares that Greece Insists Upon Maintaining Her Army in Crete, While Another Says King George Has Succeeded to the Throne of the Powers to Get Out of London, Feb. 27.—The Athens correspondent of the Times telegraphs that Prime Minister Delhannis declares Greece's decision to maintain her army in Crete is irrevocable. The correspondent adds that the Roman Catholic archbishop of Athens has telegraphed to the pope asking his holiness to mediate between Greece and the powers.

One of the Powers Said to Have Withdrawn from the Concert.

ATHENS, Feb. 27.—The popular indignation against the great powers shows no sign of waning, and if the people had their way they would fight with arms in their hands against the combined forces of Europe in defense of their right to protect the Christians in Crete.

It is reported that one of the powers has withdrawn from the concert. If this is true it will leave matters in status quo, and will break up the concert, the efforts of which have been directed to overawing Greece by threats.

PARIS, Feb. 27.—The Matin says that the scheme for the settlement of the Cretan difficulty by requiring the withdrawal of the Greek troops, and later, of the Turkish troops, and granting autonomy to the island, as outlined by Lord Salisbury in the British house of lords, was originally propounded by Russia, and was the first diplomatic success achieved by Count Muraviev, the new Russian minister of foreign affairs.

England Lost to Acquisitiveness.

BERLIN, Feb. 27.—The National Zeitung says that the plan for the pacification of Crete by granting autonomy to the island, was proposed by Russia and agreed to by Germany without reserve. Austria and France were the next to accept the proposal and the adhesion of Great Britain was received last of all.

NEBRASKA'S SENATE.

Almost a Unit in Denouncing Spanish Indignities to Our Nation.

LINCOLN, Neb., Feb. 27.—In the state senate yesterday, Senator Caldwell, of Nuckolls county, offered a resolution regarding the alleged indignities inflicted upon Americans in Cuba. After reviewing the situation, it proceeds as follows:

We resent and disapprove the present attitude and policy of the present administration in its unpatriotic treatment of these outrages daily committed by Spain and against our national honor; and that we commend the action of Consul-General Lee in resigning his consulship rather than obey the instructions of the state department in its unpatriotic and unamerican policy in Cuba.

It was introduced as a party measure, being signed by the seven republican senators, but was adopted by an almost unanimous vote, but one senator opposing it.

President Cleveland is quite sick and it is seriously feared he will not be able to do his part at the inauguration of McKinley today.

All accounts go to show that Birmingham's Mardi Gras was a great success, and it is said that such crowds were never seen by the Magic City before.

Bryan's income from his book, "The First Battle," amounts to $100 a day. It is a wonderful publication and is destined to put the American people in position to forever rid themselves of the gold standard and British rule in 1900.—Talladega News-Reporter.

A fearful accident occurred near Chattanooga last Wednesday by a fast train striking a wagon containing nine members of a family, and only one escaped. The family were en route to that city and were crossing the track on a sharp curve, omitting first to stop and listen for the cars, when just as the wagon struck the track the train rushed upon them making escape impossible.

Ottis Smith, the great leader of Atlanta society, was arrested for embezzlement a few days since and is now in jail awaiting trial. Young Smith was a bright, promising man and thought to be far from stooping to such nefarious business, but, he says, in order to keep in the swim he was obliged to do so and he did not have courage to resist the temptation. Moral: Beware of this so-called society.

A Birmingham citizen, just returned from New York, says there is great business activity in the metropolis, and that the idle money will soon flow in this direction. A money lender says that money is already easier, and there is no trouble in getting money on good collateral at 8 per cent. Mr. Nat Baxter says every indication points to better times. Dr. Boland says there is more demand for machinery than at this time last year.—State Herald.

President McKinley is fast paying his debt of gratitude to Marcus Alonzo Hanna. By bringing all his forces to bear he has persuaded Gov. Bushnell to appoint Mr. Hanna to the United States senate to fill the place of Senator Sherman who will resign to accept the portfolio of state in McKinley's cabinet. A more discreditable deal was never made in American politics and it behooves every good citizen to raise his voice in condemnation of this scandal. Doubtly dangerous it is because a president elect of the United States allows himself to become a party to such a transaction and uses his influence to bring it about, and proves what all thinking people have feared that Hanna's domination over the president elect is to follow him to the White House.

The Chicago Chronicle says: One of the most contemptible acts of the enemies of President Cleveland in the present congress has been the scandalous imputation cast upon him by the senate in ordering an investigation into the circumstances under which the secretary of the interior issued to the Perrine heirs a patent for a tract of land claimed by them for generations. The sole reason for this spiteful piece of business is that Mrs. Cleveland is distantly related to the Perrines, and the object of calling for an investigation is to show that Secretary Francis granted the patent because of that relation. There might have been the shadow of an excuse had this claim originated during either term of President Cleveland, but, as a matter of fact, it is nearly fifty years old.

Today President Cleveland steps from the throne of power never, doubtless, to ascend again, and while this is strictly in accord with his wishes it is a great detriment to the country. Never in the history of a nation has a man been more unjustly condemned than has he, yet he goes forth from this high office with a character unsullied and with devotion to the true principles of democracy unshaken. He is to be succeeded by a man whom we believe to be fully competent for the position although we are diametrically opposed to the principles he advocates, but we are sure that no mortal man more competent to hold the reins of government and steer a nation through a more perilous season than this grand hero, Grover Cleveland, will soon fill the presidential chair.

The death of the constitutional convention caused much disappointment in Birmingham, as she rarely, if ever, gets defeated in anything she undertakes. Quite a number of her shrewdest and most successful politicians gave the question their undivided attention but the pops proved too strong for them and they can only console themselves that the fact that this question was by no means settled with that rate but will continue to be agitated until the desired end is reached. There is no doubt that the city is greatly cramped by her inability to raise sufficient revenue to meet expenses, and the present constitution stands directly in the way of the accomplishment of this end. It is commendable, however, on the part of her citizens, to show as they do, their desire to meet their obligations and improve the interests of our commonwealth.

A FEARFUL WARNING.

I am thinking today of a bright June Sabbath, more than forty years ago. I remember the pretty town whose tasteful dwellings, lovely flower gardens and beautiful streets were the pride and joy of her people. It seemed fair enough for Eden and I, a happy child, had not yet waked up to the fact that sin and suffering had entered the world.

My mother and I were on our way to church when suddenly we heard a shriek as of one in mortal terror. Again and again that terrible sound pierced our ears. Never in my life have I heard anything like it! Frightened, I looked up into my mother's face, and asked her what it was. In hushed tones she told me that young Mr. L— was dying of delirium tremens, in a house near by.

On reaching the church, we found a congregation of people whose pale, awestricken faces gave token of their sympathy for the unhappy boy and his wretched mother. The minister arose and began his sermon, but God was speaking to that congregation, and the words of the good man were scarcely heard.

Ever and anon that piercing cry rang out again. Gradually it grew weaker, and finally all was hushed. Just then a long wail of agony—of utter despair smote upon our ears! Mothers wept tears of sympathy for the stricken one, who, with that cry, fell unconscious by the bedside of her darling son. With a tender prayer for the sorrowing household the minister dismissed his congregation, and many sought the solitude which is a necessity when the soul must hold communion with its God.

I remained in that town for many years, and frequently met the desolate mother on her way to and from the cemetery which held all that was mortal of her lost one. But her face never lost its sadness, and the hopeless expression of her eyes would haunt me for days.

Never do I see a glass of intoxicating liquors without hearing again the cry of that dying boy, and once more seeing the hopeless countenance of his desolate mother. God grant that the dark shadow which enveloped her life may never fall upon your pathway or mine! MARAH.

AN ALABAMA ROMANCE.

Some forty years ago a young man of Calhoun county, in this state, named W. H. Allen, abandoned wife and children family and friends, and, with several hundred dollars in gold, made his way to the far West, in search of a better fortune than he was obtaining in his native state. He was traced as far as Missouri, but there lost. Some time ago there was published in a New York paper the story of a man who had been confined in an asylum for the insane in New York state for twenty years, the victim of a railroad accident. He had been picked up, in the streets of New York city, and was cared for by the authorities. After these twenty years had elapsed, the man suddenly regained his reason, told his name and asserted that he had investments of property in California. An enquiry showed that what he said was true and that the property had risen in value until it was worth several million dollars. Suit was at once entered for the property to the man who, being believed dead, had become dispossessed. The man's name is W. H. Allen, and Talladega and Calhoun county people are wondering, and trying to find out, if he is the W. H. Allen who departed from Alabama in 1857. The wife of that Allen is long since dead, but several children are present to enjoy the millions, if there are any millions in prospect for them.

"MC" IN THE WHITE HOUSE.

New York Cor. Philadelphia Ledger.

McKinley will be the first president to have a "Mc" to his name. It is a singular fact, considering the prominence of the Scotch and Irish blood among the American people, that not a single "Mc" has served as president, vice president or speaker. Several "Macs," however, have served in the cabinet. Washington had James McHenry for secretary of war. Monroe had John McLean for postmaster general. Jackson had Louis McLean for secretary of state and also of the treasury. Tyler had John McLean for secretary of war. Pierce had Robert McClelland for secretary of the interior. Lincoln and Arthur had Hugh McCulloch for secretary of the treasury. Hayes had George W. McCrary for secretary of war and Garfield had Wayne McVeagh for attorney general. President McKinley, it is expected, will have two "Macs" in his cabinet, McKenna and McCook. In this connection it is of interest to note that of all the original fighting McCooks who took part in the civil war only four are now living. John J. McCook, the new attorney general, was the youngest of the "tribe of Dan," the name given to the sons of Major Daniel McCook. His brother, General McCook, of the regular army, and his cousins, City Chamberlain Anson G. McCook and Rev. J. J. McCook, of Trinity College, Hartford, are the other survivors of the two branches of this famous family that gave its full male strength to the defence of the Union.

CATS KILLED IN PULPIT.

Congregation Hears a Sermon on Tobacco and See it Illustrated.

Cadillac, Mich., letter in The Cleveland Leader.

The announcement that Rev. W. L. Laufman, assisted by Dr. C. E. Miller, would kill two cats in the pulpit of the Methodist church to illustrate Laufman's sermon on tobacco, was sufficient to pack the church.

Prominent on the pulpit were packages of fine cut and plug chewing tobacco. Laufman contended in his sermon that tobacco in any form was bound to fill the user with nicotine and eventually produce death. In tragic tones he declared that the Spain of today was not the chivalric Spain of Columbus's time, because of the prevalent use of tobacco.

"Turkey," he said, "has now fallen low on account of its natural vice, tobacco."

He claimed that France had a rapidly diminishing population on account of the use of tobacco, and said:

"We, of all nations, the most nervous, can least of all afford to play fast and loose with tobacco, the enemy of the body, the mind and the soul."

Holding aloft a pound plug of tobacco he assured his hearers that it contained enough grains of nicotine to kill two hundred men.

Then the cats were brought up by Dr. Miller. An assistant held them while the doctor administered the nicotine. The first one died in a minute and a half, while the attendant held it, after three drops of nicotine had been placed on its tongue. The next cat, a large one was administered only two drops, the purpose being to illustrate the sickness and spasms which the first dose of tobacco creates. A second dose of two drops was given, and in a minute and a quarter the cat was dead.

The Rev. Mr. Laufman announced that next Sunday he would kill some more cats to show the effects of alcohol, and also have on exhibition the stomach of a drunkard.

We note with pleasure that the Hawkins' steel process is again soon to be tested in Birmingham by English experts. While the Home advocates agriculture as the groundwork and first floor of our Southern prosperity, and confidently look to our farmers to bring the South up to, and beyond what she once gloriously was, yet our mineral wealth, especially our iron and coal fields, esoteric and idle now, simply for the lack of capital, can and will, in the course of time surely become invaluable concomitants. This Southland, and conspicuously this heaven-dowered and iron freight section, is a great and as yet undeveloped field awaiting the magic wand of capital.—Talladega Home.

I desire to attest to the merits of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy as one of the most valuable and efficient preparations on the market. It broke an exceedingly dangerous cough for me in 24 hours, and in gratitude therefor, I desire to inform you that I will never be without it and you should feel proud of the high esteem in which your remedies are held by people in general. It is the one remedy among ten thousand. Success to it.—O. R. Downey, Editor Democrat, Albion, Ind. For sale by J. E. Seale & Co., Druggists.

There was a divorce case tried in North Dakota last week before a jury composed of six men and six women. It resulted in a mistrial—the jury dividing six against six. They wrestled with the case three days with the result as stated. It is said that two marriages will result among the jurymen and women from their lengthened and unsuccessful endeavor to sever the marital bonds of a couple that had concluded that marriage was a failure.—Selma Times.

A man stands no chance of being elected to the mayorship of a city unless he enjoys the confidence and esteem of his neighbors. Geo. W. My family and neighbors have tested it, and we know it is an excellent remedy for coughs and colds.—George W. Humphrey." Sold by J. E. Seale & Co., Druggists.

The average country editor fills his columns with advice to the farmer, telling him, frequently, to the smallest detail, just how he should conduct his farm. The tiller of the soil retaliates by giving the editor pointers on how the work of journalism should be carried on. All the while the public wonders why they don't exchange places; thus assuring success for themselves and a rest for those who read the papers.

On the morning of Feb. 20, 1895, I was sick with rheumatism, and lay in bed until May 21st, when I got a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. The first application of it relieved me almost entirely from the pain and the second afforded complete relief. In a short time I was able to be up and about again.—A. T. Moreaux, Luverne, Minn. PRESIDENT CLEVELAND.

"President Cleveland," says the New Orleans Picayune, "has done more for the southern people and states than has any other chief magistrate of the United States since any of the presidents have been elected from southern states, and the last of these was General Taylor, who died in a year after his inauguration."

"But no president was ever so antagonized, hated and opposed by the southern democratic party leaders as was and is Mr. Cleveland. They seem to have forgotten that he proposed and exerted himself to have all the Federal election surveillance laws repealed and abolished, thus giving the southern people complete local self government and control of their own elections. They disregard the fact that he put an undue number of prominent southern men in high public office. It was all for nothing that President Cleveland fought for a low tariff for the southern people, as against the protected and privileged classes of New England and northern manufacturers. They only remember that Mr. Cleveland opposed the depreciation of the money standard of the country, and fought for the maintenance of sound money and the preservation of the national credit at the highest possible point, and these facts seem to have wrought his utter condemnation and every opportunity is seized upon by the southern political managers to express their hostility to the president."

"Doubtless hatred of President Cleveland and a desire to discredit his administration had more than anything else to do with the opposition to the treaty, and it is to be regretted that southern democratic senators make up the head and front of that position. It is a most remarkable spectacle that the object of their bitterest hatred is the man who has done everything for the southern people."

Electricity Astonishes Him.

From the New York World.

Br-r-rup! The trolley car started off with a jerk and the stranger from Cohoes sat down with a snap. He got up in a hurry, felt of himself anxiously, felt of the seat curiously, peered under the seat inquisitively and looked up the hole where the stovepipe used to be vacantly.

"Wall, I swan!" he said.

"What's wrong?" asked the conductor, with sympathy.

"Wall, I'd like to know how in common sense you heat ere car?" he said.

"Tricity," said the conductor.

"Tricity," eh? Wall, I swan! Great thing, that 'tricity, hain't it? Fust it shoves you, then it lights you and now it cooks! Anythin' else in the 'tricity line, young man?"

We have just printed a large supply of waive notes—a magnificent form that will hold forever and one day longer, and are nicely bound in books of fifty notes each.

Public opinion will very generally condemn the action of the legislature in failing to establish a reformatory for youthful criminals, and a state bureau of immigration. There was a general sentiment favoring these measures and naturally the people feel that their wishes were defied by the legislature. The fight made against these bills was that the state was unable to make the appropriations necessary to enforce the provisions of the proposed laws, but this is poor justification when we consider that other laws are rigidly enforced which are of less moment to the general public. The truth is that no higher duty devolves upon our lawmakers than building up the state and lessening crime, and to have refused their assistance in this regard is a sad commentary upon our legislative solons. The failure to enact these laws will serve to crystallize public sentiment in their favor and two years later these measures will have practically no opposition. The people want the waste places covered with prosperous farms and they want misguided youths saved from criminal associations.—Huntsville Mercury.

The following special from Washington gives plainly Mr. Bryan's views regarding the silver republicans: "I believe that they are right in continuing a separate organization as silver republicans. They were among the most effective supporters of bimetalism during the campaign and since the election they have stood unshaken and undismayed. They do not consider themselves democrats or populists, and since they cannot affiliate with the republican party, while it stands for the gold standard, they have wisely decided to complete an organization and hold their forces together. In accepting the nomination of the national silver party, I stated that we did not insist upon the silver republicans becoming democrats, but that we accepted their support with the understanding that the same patriotism which directed them in 1896 would be present to direct them in 1900. The democratic party deserved their confidence in 1896 and I hope that it will deserve their support in the next campaign. Future events must determine what is wise in 1900."

Secretary Herbert took with him to Charleston a handsome gold medal to be presented Seaman Creelman of the battleship Maine, who sprang from the vessel when men were washed overboard during the violent storm on that vessel's cruise to Charleston. The medal which is nearly the size of a silver dollar, bears on its reverse a picture of the Maine in high relief and on its obverse the inscription: "Mm. J. Creelman, United States Navy, for extraordinary heroism, February 6th, 1897. Presented by the Secretary of the Navy." The medal is hung from a heavy blue ribbon which supports a massive gold anchor.

Voltaire and Piron were enemies. To their embarrassment they met one day at the country house of a friend. Piron got up early, went to Voltaire's door and wrote upon it the word "Rogue."

At breakfast Voltaire smilingly said to him: "I thank you for showing your interest in my welfare by leaving your card at my door this morning."—San Francisco Argonaut.

Plumists say that long fingers are a sign of refinement. A short, stubby hand argues a lack of sensibility; a thin thumb, rather small, denotes weakness. Strength of character is shown by the thumb asserting itself over the other fingers. If the thumb curves backward, its owner is obstinate.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Deliver us From Darkness.

Now that our town is incorporated and improving why is it that our citizens are forced to stumble along our streets at night without lights? Our city fathers could with very little expense place a dozen street lamps along our Main street and the benefit to the town would doubly repay them for the expense. Our sidewalks do not happen to be the best in the world when you have plenty of light, but for ladies to be compelled to stumble along upon dark rainy nights, such as we have experienced lately, first in a mud-hole and then in a pool of water it is to say the least discreditable to our enterprise. Let us get out of these old ruts and not be so piggyish—or is the city so poor that it can not buy half a dozen street lamps and a barrel of oil. Let the people agitate the street light question.

Wise Sayings.

Every beginning is pleasant. The threshold is the place of expectation. Behavior is a mirror in which every one displays his own image.

Misunderstandings and neglect occasion more mischief in this world than even malice and wickedness.

Words are good, but there is something better. The best cannot be explained by words. The spirit on which we act is the chief matter.

Happy the man who learns the immeasurable distance between his wishes and his powers.

Art is long, life is short; judgment is difficult, opportunity fleeting. To act is easy—to think is difficult, and to act pursuant to ones thoughts is troublesome.

He alone is great and happy who fills his own station of independence and has neither to command nor to obey.

The safest mode of action is to employ ourselves with our nearest duty.

What is important is to have a soul which loves truth and receives it wherever it finds it.

From near at hand one must not hope, but from afar. Let us trust in God; each one in himself and in the other, and so it will be well.

Active, Passive and Neutral.

A little grammar found in an old garret at Portland, N. H., has illustrations of the rules as follows: The active, passive and neuter verbs are represented by the picture of a father whipping his little boy. The father is active, the little boy is passive and the mother sitting by herself on a stool looking on, but doing nothing, is neuter.

SCALLOP-BACK BILLY.

Proof That Fits Don't Run in the Lucas Family.

A Quaint and Characteristic Story From Life as They Live It In the Woods and Hills.

In my day and generation I have told so scandalous many terrible big stories, till right now I can't recollect for certain whether I have ever told you the chapter from Rocky Creek history in regards to Andy Lucas and Scallop-back Billy, as we were wont to call him. Well, anyhow, Scallop-back Billy is a calico-sided mustang pony, with white stockin feet and a skewbald face, and for some time past he has been Andy's regular standby for tradin stock.

Now, in them days it so come to pass that I was right there present on the ground when the first trade was made, wherein Scallop-back Billy fell into Andy's hands, and I recollect all the whenceness and the wherefores thereof.

It would seem like Andy and me had went to town together on Saturday along in the fall of the year, and on our return back home that evening we struck road acquaintance with a stranger which, according to his own doxology, hailed from the Crawford settlement way down in the river country, but from the way things turned out afterwards he was lyn like a yaller dog about that.

Anyhow, the stranger was ridin of a little high-headed, proud-steppin horse, with calico-painted sides and other fancy trimmings on him. He was likewise rigged out in a sereakin new saddle, with a red saddle blanket, and by gracious he was skimming along over the earth like a bird in great shape. Andy he was powerful taken up with the general appearances of the little horse, and he bantered the stranger for a trade right then and there on the spot.

The stranger he responded back that he was then ridin the best piece of horseflesh that was ever done up in that much hide, and consequently he want in no wise particular keen to part company with him. But at the same time he went on to say that he was a tradin man and would swap anything he had, except his wife and children, providin of course he got the figgers fixed to suit him.

"Well, comin right down to business and rock bottom," says Andy, "how will you change saddles and bridles with me?"

Andy was a ridin of a little plug mule which he had traded for that day, and which the same stood him in hand about $40, and was well worth the money.

As I said in the outstart, I am not ridin my swappin stock to-day, the stranger went on to say, "and I reckon you would have to lay about $15 on your mule's back before the change can take place."

"I am willin to make it ten dollars even Steven," says Andy, "and if that boot ain't big enough I reckon we will have to retire from the trade."

"Well, now, I have never yet seen the day when I come so low down as to let five dollars bust up a horse swap," the stranger responded, "and you are traded with."

The Scallop Shows Up.

The next minute they had both lit and dismounted and got down to round up the trade. They changed bridles in the first place, and then as Andy pulled his saddle off and was taken a farewell look at his mule, the stranger gave a quick jerk and flung his saddle from the pony to the mule's back. For some minutes then Andy he looked at me and then at the pony, and I looked at the pony and then at Andy, whilst his eyes bulged out as big as a pair of saucers, and I had a powerful hankerin to laugh.

When the stranger took off his saddle and then pulled all the blankets out, one by one, blamed if they didn't leave a hole in the pony's back as big as a hamper basket. You couldn't tell for certain by lookin at him what in the thunderation had happened to him, but it would seem as if a big slice of his back had been bit out or chopped out at a very young and early age. We found out afterwards that the dead limb of a tree had fell on him when he was a mere colt and broke his back. And then when he got well and come around on his legs onest more that ugly scallop was still there, and there to stay. The stranger had a kind of silly look, but it ain't no ways probable that the Fool Killer had ever had any pressin engagements at his house, and he had filled up that ugly hole in the pony's back with about 15 saddle blankets, foldin them every one a little wider and wider till he brung the valley up to a level with the knobs and hills surroundin.

"Well, man, sir, when he lifted his saddle and blankets and pulled the vaddin out and left that thunderin big hole there in the pony's back he looked a blessed sight more like a drummedary than a piece of horse flesh. I thought in my soul for a few minutes that Andy Lucas would faint and fall down in it in spite of all that could be said or done. But he rallied presently and come back to his right mind and proper spirits.

By this time the stranger was bucklin up the girths as if to take on a waterbury movement, and leanin over in my saddle and whisperin to Andy, says I:

"That dabburned infernal scoundrel beast has swapped the livin socks off of you by workin a low down trick. It will never do for you to go home ridin that double-action, scallop-back thing—never in the created world. Kue the trade—even pull if you can't do no better—but rue the trade, Andy—rue the trade."

"This mought be a devilish good time of year for you to lay low and say nothin, Rufe," Andy whispered back to me. "You want me to play this game dead-square into the stranger's hand, and I don't most in generally always handle the documents that way. It looks like both of you took me for a natural-born durn fool, but we will see about that, Rufe—we will see."

Then turnin to the stranger, who was now mounted on the mule with his boots in the stirrups, Andy smiled a pleasant, homely smile, and went on to say:

"Now, stranger, if you have got any more scallop-back, calico horses down in your country I would love the best in the world for you to bring a drove the next time you are passin through our settlement. I have got a few head of mules and horses over to my plantation—both straight backs and scallop backs and hump backs—and I will trade with you most any time and any way. The scallop-back horses are all the go in this country now, whilst the straight backs are way yonder out of the fashion."

"Holy Moses and the twelve apostles, what a lie!" thinks I to myself, but as Andy had already give it out that he was time of year to say nothin had come, I didn't put my hand into the game any more. And yet still I did feel like a fool, as all over in spots from the fear that the way in which he had got bit and bugged in the trade and the general shock which struck us when the stranger pulled the vaddin out of the hole in that pony's back, had kindly unstrung Andy's nervous system and addled his mind.

Who Was Crazy That Day?

In the main time I couldn't help but take notice that the stranger kept hangin around like he was waitin for some thin to happen and would rather not go, whilst I thought if it was me after throwin as much dirt on a man as he had on Andy I would be movin my washin in a swingin gallop.

But presently Andy he swung himself into his saddle, tightened the reins on scallop-back Billy, wished the stranger a whole lot of good luck, waved his hat at him in sayin good-by, tangled his spurs with the flank girth and away he went. He pulled in and waited for me a mile or two down the road, and when I rid up he was dismounted on the ground, rubbin and pettin that pony, and talkin and carryin on with himself like a man that was borned a fool and had also went crazy.

"Andy Lucas," talkin to himself out loud so I could hear, "you may not be smart enough to run for congress, but the family records will show that you ain't all sorts of a fool on the same day. You have got a head as long as a flour barrel and as level as a squash. You may show the whites of your eyes and look foolish sometimes, but I'll be doubly dabburned if there is anything particular green in your general records. But it does raley look like that will take some people forever to find out that you are a natural-born horse trader, with great gobs of sense, and that fits don't run in the Lucas family. But you jest spit on your bait and wait, and then when a sucker comes along and bites you can throw him out on dry land so he never can flutter back to water."

"Git on your horse, Andy, and come on. It is gettin late and we would best be movin along towards home," says I, soft and gentle as I could, cause I then felt plum certain that the man was not in his right mind.

"Say here, Rufe, don't you be givin yourself so infernal much trouble and worriment about me," he come back, kindly firin up, like he was mad. "You mought maybe think I am as blind as a mole and as crazy as a chinch. A heap of people ain't got no better sense than to think that, and you must be one of the people this evenin. The stranger we met back yonder in the road—the idiot which swapped me this pony for that old mule—has backed his own fool self up agin that very snag. Can't you stir up the mush in your mutton head sufficient to see that I have swapped the very daylight out of the stranger, and him a-lookin at me all the time? Don't you know this scallop-back pony is worth a small drove of sich mules as that to a man in the tradin business like me? Didn't you see the game that dabburned fool was tryin to play on me, and can't you see how the documents have come my way like a mill race with the dam busted? You saw the idiot grinnin at me, and hangin around like a man that was saunt for and didn't want to go worth a hardly, and yet you couldn't see through his game. By the eternal Jim-jams, Rufe, it is as plain to me as a painted horse rack in ten acres of burnt woods. And now, accordin to my general opinions, if there is a man in this crowd that is a standin candidate for the crazy siloam, his name is Sanders, and not Lucas by a durn sight."

Andy Recovers Rapidly.

"Now, see if you can't manage so as to let a few ideas soak through your hair, whilst I try to give you some of the mainest pints in the game," says Andy, as he mounted and we rid on towards home.

"That blame fool stranger which traded with me back yonder has jest simply swapped off the goose that lays gold eggs and never goes to set, as it were, and I saw through his trick like a flash. He calculated that when he took off his saddle and pulled the blankets out of the terrible hole in the pony's back I would be paralyzed on the spot and dead crazy to rue the trade. You would have took his bait like a little sucker if you had stood in my shoes, but, havin come down from a generation of horse traders, I didn't snap and gobble down the bait any to speak of. He thought I would ask him and beg him for a rue, and at last offer to swap back even in orderment to git rid of the scallop-back pony, and in that way he could keep the boot money I had paid him and land $100—clean, cold cash—in his flanks as easy as pickin it up in the big road. I'll bet my Sunday boots, Rufe, that he has made 50 trades like this. You took notice of how he kept hangin around and waitin for me to say something, which I never did say. Well, he was jest simply beat out in his own game, and I could see that it cut him to the bone. Right now I will bet the best mule in the settlement that he would be more than glad to rue the trade and let me name the figgers. You only wait now till my time comes and let me show you how easy the trick will work. There is some dirt in it I know, but accordin to the scrip-tures anything is fair in love and war and politics and horse tradin."

As we rid on towards home scallop-back Billy danced and pranced and went sideways and put on more airs than the drum major of a brass band. Everybody we met in the road had to turn round and take a good look at Andy's high-headed, calico pony. Torectly it so happened that we met up with another stranger. Andy tickled scallop-back Billy in the flanks with his spurs and wouldn't let him break his gait. But the stranger looked back at us and hollered to Andy:

"Say, mister, are you ridin swappin stock this evenin?"

"Not if the court knows herself and she ruther thinks she does," Andy come back at him. "But at the same time I come from swappin stock myself, and you mought bring on a trade if you are any ways sufferin for one."

"Well, how will you change with me?" says the stranger, which he was ridin of a little roan mare some 12 or 13 years old.

"This aint my time of year to trade," says Andy, "but if you want to put your own trappings on this pony you mought pitch in and do the tradin. Money talks, and when you hit me right with the figgers I will let you know."

So the stranger he first made a pass at Andy to trade even, and from that he went to offerin boot. All this time Andy said nothin—only kept on shakin his head—till the stranger run the figgers up to $20, when the trade was closed and Andy put the money in his left flank pocket. Then they dismounted and changed bridles and pulled off their saddles. And, man sir, when the stranger walked around and saw that awful hole in the pony's back he dropped his saddle to the ground and I thought in my soul he would go off in a dead trance right there in the big road.

"Say, mister, I wouldn't ride that dang thing home and turn him loose in my father's lot for $50," says the young man when he recovered from the shock sufficient to talk.

"You made your own trade, young man," says Andy, "and if you don't love to ride, walkin is tolerable good at this season of the year."

"I want to rue back and go home," says the young man, whilst his voice quavered and trembled like he was fixin to cry.

"I don't know how it is over in your settlement," says Andy, "but we don't trade horses that a way around Rocky Creek."

"I will give you the pony even trade for my mare, and you can keep the boot money," the young man went on, lookin powerful sorry like and pitiful. "Durned if I wouldn't tote my saddle and walk home before I would ride this infernal freak of nature."

"You have done made one trade already this evenin, and if nothin else will do I reckon I will have to let you make another one," says Andy. "Throw your saddle on the mare and go back home to your ma, and the next time you start out on a horse swappin stampede fight shy of the Rocky Creek settlement."

Scallop-Back Horses All the Go.

The young man was so tremendous glad to swap back most anyway till he went off rejoicin, whilst Andy he rid home on scallop-back Billy, with $20 spot cash landed safe in his left flank pocket.

Nobody knows for certain how many times Andy has swapped off scallop-back Billy, but he gets him back every clatter with a little boot money throwed in for good measure. The stranger which first swapped him to Andy sent a trader into the settlement onest, and sent him after scallop-back Billy at any price. But Andy got onto the trick, and when finally at last the trader shook $100 at him for the calico pony Andy would only shake his head and say:

"Not this year. Some other year, perhaps. Tell the man which sent you here that I love him like a twin brother. I do. And tell him moreover also that the scallop-back horses are now all the go around Rocky Creek."

And so if it ever comes to pass that you mought pitch out to try your hand with swappin stock, you can keep in mind that there is one man in this great country which always falls like a cat on his feet. It would pay you likewise also to recollect that fits don't run in the Lucas family.

ELECTRIC LOCOMOTIVES.

Some of Their Advantages Over Steam Engines for Switching.

The most striking thing about the behavior of the electric locomotive is the certainty with which it may be moved over short distances, varying from a few inches to a few feet.

The obedience of the motors to the controller is practically instantaneous, this doing away at one stroke with one of the chief drawbacks to steam switching engines, with which there is a noticeable delay between the time when the throttle valve is opened and the pistons begin to move, in this way often causing the engineer, no matter how careful he may be, to overshoot his mark.

This delay in action, while generally only a few seconds in each case, amounts up seriously in the case of a whole day's work, and is the chief cause of the proverbial lateness of freight trains which have much switching to do at intermediate stations.

From the fact that the movement of the electric locomotive can be graduated so nicely, a full third of the time usually occupied by steam locomotives can be saved, particularly as single empty cars unprovided with automatic couplings need never be bunted off by too rapid an approach of the engine, as frequently happens under switching conditions as they now are.

Again, the acceleration of the electric locomotive is so even that the freight cars of a comparative long train are started, one after another, without jerking and without apparent strain. A weak draw bar is thus protected against sudden fracture, and no "lensing off" with consequent reduction in speed and delay in getting under way, is necessary, as in the case of the steam locomotive.

The electric locomotive, further, is fitted with a quick-acting air brake, the pressure for which is kept at its maximum by an automatic electric air pump, instead of the comparatively slow-acting steam brake which is usually attached to steam switching engines.

The handiness with which an electric locomotive may be operated is another point in its favor. There is neither the internal pressure of the steam against the throttle valve nor the stiffness and weight of the link reversing gear to overcome. A dainty controller handle, which could be moved by a child, and a reversing handle almost equally light and movable, open and arrange the paths for the current.—Cassier's Magazine.

It seemed very small then, but as it nealed the earth, coming rapidly from a northwesterly direction, it appeared to grow much largh till it looked to be about the size of a barrel of old bou'bon, and then it exploded into fragments about as large as a whisky glass. The rapid rising of the Alabama river caused the loss of a great deal of freight on the wharf at Mobile and it is feared if the heavy rains do not cease a fearful overflow will occur.

Ex-Secretary Herbert has decided to locate in Washington to begin the practice of law, and will take as his partner his son-in-law Mr. Benjamin Micon, who was a practicing lawyer in Anniston a few years ago.

We notice among our exchanges The Howard Cadet, edited by the pupils of that college. The paper is very newsy and gotten up in a style which makes it quite interesting. The college is to be congratulated upon having such bright, intelligent young men and bespeaks for it thorough training in literary branches.

An exchange says: Mother McKinley remarked the other day with a sigh that she had "always hoped that William would become a Methodist Bishop," which causes a contemporary to add that it beats the land how most of us are continually disappointing maternal hopes by getting elected president or doing something of that sort.

The inter-collegiate debate to be had at Talladega during Chattanooga has been set for June 30th. The colleges have appointed the following young men to represent them: Howard, J. B. Tidwell; Southern University at Greensboro, J. A. Baxley; State University, Eric Pettus. Auburn has not yet selected a representative. This promises to be one of the most interesting features of the Chattanooga.

"Truth crushed to earth will rise again." Thus will it be after the heat of the presidential campaign just past has subsided and people have again settled to quiet reasoning will the great good that Cleveland endeavored to accomplish will be appreciated; but, if not then, when a decade shall have rolled over our heads and we turn to retrospect the great men of the past, then it is that his image will rise prominently before our view.

The train that carried Vice President Hobart and his party to Washington broke the record for fast time between New York and Washington. The train left Jersey City at 11:15 a. m. and arrived in Washington at 2:23 p. m., the time from New York to Washington being four hours and twenty-three minutes the fastest ever made between the two points. The distance traveled was 231 miles and it was made in 235 minutes. Some extraordinary bursts of speed were made on the route, in one of which two miles were made in one minute the rate of 120 miles an hour.

The Greeks from all over the country are preparing to answer the call of King George and are going forth daily to their native country to assist in the war against Turkey. It is said there are 40,000 Greeks in this country and of this number 10,000 have already made ready to depart. In cities where quite a number are together they are forming themselves into companies, drilling and preparing in every way to enter the field at once upon their arrival. This certainly shows great patriotism on the part of this people and we are fearful if our nation was put to the same test they would fall short.

The act of congress providing a limited indemnity for registered letters is now law, having been signed by President Cleveland a few days ago. For a very small extra fee, insurance to the amount of $10 can be obtained upon a registered letter. The registered mail is one of the few branches of the mail service which affords a revenue, and it is quite certain that on the present basis of the earnings of the registered mail, all insurance claims could be earned and the branch would still return a considerable surplus. It is believed, however, that the insurance feature will have the effect of considerably increasing the registered mail business, with the result of bringing in greater returns, so that the surplus turned into the department will not be reduced.—Birmingham News.

The inauguration of President McKinley on last Thursday passed amid great displays of pomp and splendor, nothing happening during the entire ceremonies to mar in the least the serenity of the occasion. It was particularly pleasant to note the good will and friendliness existing between the retiring and succeeding presidents, who seemed not to entertain the least animosity or dislike for each other, but seemingly forgetting that they were opponents in politics and that their opinions differed as widely as the isles of the sea, spent the entire day in each others company and took leave only when it became absolutely necessary and then in the most pleasant of manners. In his inaugural address President McKinley's views of the vital issues now before us were very conservative, and we sincerely trust the execution of these laws he has pledged to enact will be as conservative as he would make them appear.

THE SOUTHERN RAILWAY'S EXHIBIT AT THE TENNESSEE CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Arrangements have been perfected by which the Southern Railway's territory will be represented at the exposition which opens at Nashville on May 1. This, like former exhibits made by that company, will include sample specimens of mineral, agricultural, forest and other products of the states of Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, East Tennessee and Kentucky. This company's exhibit at the Atlanta and Pittsburg Expositions attracted the attention of the agriculturist, manufacturer, miner, stock-raiser and others, and did more to educate the visitors to an appreciation of the great wealth and possibilities of the South than any other one exhibit that was shown, and it is the policy of the company to actively continue this method of advertising. The scenic beauties of the country through which the Southern Railway runs will not be neglected in this exhibit.

Practically, this exhibit will be a bureau of information, so that visitors from the North and abroad can obtain specific data relative to all branches of industry in and tributary to the vast number of points on the Southern Railway.

This exhibit is under the direction of the Land and Industrial Department of the Southern Railway with headquarters at Washington, D. C., and persons located along that system having exhibit material that they think will interest the public and thereby help advance the best interest of the section from which it comes, should at once communicate with the agent of that department.

This is an exhibit in which every citizen of this section should be interested, and we hope that some of our readers can supply something to represent our territory.

IN MEMORIAM.

The following from the Anniston Hot Blast will be sad news to a great number of our readers as this young girl being born in Shelby, was well known and greatly loved by many there:

Died in Anniston, Ala., March 3, 1897, of diphtheria, Helen Geddings, after an illness of a few days. She was born in Shelby, Shelby county, Nov. 23, 1885. Around this dear sweet child were entwined the affections of many a loving heart. Being endowed with an unusually bright mind, affectionate disposition, and possessing a simple, childlike faith in her Saviour, she naturally won many hearts. Her teachers, schoolmates and friends, both old and young, who loved her so dearly, will sadly miss her sweet face and quiet and modest form. She loved the Sabbath school and the worship of God. From these services she will be missed. Her life shone brightest in the home circle where she was the constant companion of her mother, who almost idolized her. She was obedient, affectionate and ever ready and anxious to be helpful. In her devotion to her little brother, she won the love and admiration of those who from time to time, watched her mother care over him. How sadly strange to him that Helen does not answer when he calls. "Safe, Safe in the Arms of Jesus," she awaits the coming of loved ones. Death has claimed one link, but only to be transplanted in Heaven, which to the bereaved ones will seem much nearer than ever before. Jesus said: "Suffer little children to come unto Me and forbid them not." Helen has joined the happy band. She was conscious to the last, and was not afraid to die. To the bereaved parents—May the Good Shepherd who has taken your little lamb into the Heavenly fold, give your faith and strength to resign it to His care, and may He sustain and cheer your aching hearts. Though this sweet flower has vanished from home, it is the "Master's hand" that has transplanted it to bloom forever in Paradise. The eye that shuts in a dying hour. Will open the next in bliss. The welcome will sound in the heavenly world Ere the farewell is hushed in this.

We pass from the clasp of mourning friends. To the arms of the loved and lost; And those smiling faces will greet us there, Which on earth we have valued most.

A man stands no chance of being elected to the mayorship of a city unless he enjoys the confidence and esteem of his neighbors. Geo. W. Humphrey is the popular mayor of Swanton, Ohio, and under date of Jan. 17, 1896, he writes as follows: "This is to certify to our appreciation of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. My family and neighbors have tested it, and we know it is an excellent remedy for coughs and colds.—George W. Humphrey." Sold by J. E. Seale & Co., Druggists.

The man who either shuts the door with a bang or leaves it wide open is disgraced. No longer will he work havoc with the nerves of the people. Doors are now opened and closed automatically by electricity. A large city market has recently been fitted up with doors of this kind, the circuit being closed and the doors opened by the pressure of the visitor's feet on the mat. After the visitor has passed through, the doors are shut by the same current, and left ready to open at the next visitor's call.

I desire to attest to the merits of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy as one of the most valuable and efficient preparations on the market. It broke an exceedingly dangerous cough for me in 24 hours, and in gratitude therefor I desire to inform you that I will never be without it and you should feel proud of the high esteem in which your remedies are held by people in general. It is the one remedy among ten thousand. Success to it.—O. R. Downey, Editor, Democrat, Albion, Ind. For sale by J. E. Seale & Co., Druggists.

The tax payers in this section are kicking like bay steers at the tax commission law—is that right brother? Whether or not they have anything to kick at we can't say. Will some good brother, with a hat full of brains give us some light on the subject?

It is, or should be, the highest aim of every merchant to please his customers; and that the wide-awake drug firm of Meyers & Eshleman, Sterling, Ill., is doing so, is proven by the following, from Mr. Eshleman: "In my sixteen years' experience in the drug business I have never seen or sold or tried a medicine that gave as good satisfaction as Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy." We hear that two masculine homo genus, hailing from Columbiana attempted to fill up a ditch with a team and themselves down here a few nights since. From reports they succeeded most admirably in filling a ditch but not very fruitfully in their more cherished purpose. The night was very dark, and we suspect that their vision was clouded. At Waterloo Napoleon's horsemen went down in a ravine bridging a way for others—see!

Your Boy Won't Live a Month. So Gilman Brown, of 34 Mill St., South Gardner, Mass., was told by the doctors. His son had Lung trouble, following Typhoid Malaria, and he spent three hundred and seventy-five dollars with doctors who finally gave him up, saying: "Your son won't live a month." He tried Dr. King's New Discovery and a few bottles restored him to health and enabled him to go to work as a perfectly well man. He says he owes his present good health to use of Dr. King's New Discovery, and knows it to be the best in the world for Lung trouble. Trial Bottles Free at Parker & Armstrong's Drug Store.

J. H. HAMMOND.

Our Shelby correspondent would have us believe that two of our young men had partaken too freely of the fruit of the vineyard or were else very poor drivers from the result of a visit to his town on last Friday night.

Columbiana on last week had three charming visitors in the persons of Messrs. Mattie Kendrick, Mattie Kidd and Miss Perryman, who were in attendance upon the teachers institute. May we have another institute soon.

We were honored Monday morning by a call from Wm. G. Parker who gave us a pressing invitation to be present at and take part in, the street working which will begin next Monday. Such calls are appreciated but we hope will be rare.

We are pleased to learn that A. G. Weldon, of Wilsonville, has been appointed tax commissioner of Shelby county. Austin is an honest, energetic young man, a simple pure democrat and we feel sure that he will perform the duties of his office creditably.

The Shelby County Teachers Institute met here on last Friday and Saturday with a fairly good attendance, and many topics of vital interest to that body were discussed. Miss Elva Greek, the secretary of the institute, will furnish, at an early date, a full account of the minutes of that session, which will be received with interest by many of our readers.

Notice.

On March 16th at court house door I will sell a watch held as collateral.
GORDON DUBOSE.

Elsewhere in this issue appears an ad of Mrs. Laura C. Armstrong & Co., who have just received and opened up a beautiful line of millinery goods. It will pay you to read it, as they propose to revolutionize the town along that line.

C. E. Greek is now agent of the L. N. depot at this place, having received his commission Monday. We became aware of this fact by noticing him purchase a hat several sizes larger than usual, but this will all wear off soon and when it does we are sure he will make us a good agent.

Sheriff Vest received a telegram yesterday morning asking him to assist in capturing the band of men who held up the north bound L. & N. train about 2 miles south of Calera Tuesday night. Sheriff O'Brien, of Birmingham, with several dogs, arrived early yesterday morning and began pursuit, but up to this writing were unable to learn with what effect.

Dr. W. A. Whittle's lecture on last Friday night on the subject of "A Camel Ride" was one of the richest treats it has been our pleasure to hear for some time. The doctor is not only well versed in facts pertaining to the Holy Land and other countries, but has the faculty of mixing enough wit and humor with these facts to render them exceedingly interesting as well as instructive. We learn that it is his intention to deliver another lecture here in the near future, and should he do so, the whole of Columbiana should turn out en masse, for we can safely say that such opportunities are rare and should not pass unaccepted. Those who were so fortunate as to hear him on last Friday night will be living witnesses for him in future and we feel confident we can assure him a good audience on his next visit.

Quite a crowd of young people indulged in a stroll to the ferry Sunday afternoon.

J. N. Stinson is in Birmingham attending Massey's Business College. Pole is a bright, ambitious young man and we wish him much success.

Several fishermen have located on the river near town and our market is continually supplied with fresh fish.

Why is a man sitting on a red hot stove like a mule running away? Because you don't have to tell either one to get up.

"Pa, what makes an old bachelor so cranky and crabbed? Because they have no one to fear my son."

W. T. Kidd, of Vincent, was in town a few moments Tuesday.

Quite an expensive break-down occurred at the planing mill of J. C. Jackson & Sons last Thursday. A 14 knife jumped off the top cylinder and the result was a ruined cylinder, a broken cylinder yoke and two broken pressure bars. They have replaced the broken parts and now have the machine operating again.

The literary society assembled at the residence of Mrs. S. A. Deniser Friday night. The debate, "Resolved that flirting is a crime" was decided in the negative. Look out, girls, we are coming. The address by W. R. Smith was very interesting and oratorical. The reading by Miss Cora Smith, "Personal Influence," was very nice, flowery and filled with good mottoes and good advice. We hope to have the pleasure of being entertained by her again soon, we need more such honorary members. The program for next meeting will be another Wilsonville Dispatch.

It is stated that President McKinley carried Canton to Washington in his vest pocket.

Mark William Hanna McKinley is now president of this great nation, the grandest people on earth, and we will wait patiently to see and feel the better times which the republican party has promised; but should we make sorry crops, have a dry year, and water get scarce we are not going to blame McKinley with it like some of the reps and pops did Mr. Cleveland.

Dr. E. B. Teague, who has been spending several weeks here with his daughter, Mrs. Nelson, returned home last Sunday. The doctor has many friends in and around Harpersville, who are always glad to see him.

A bill was passed by the last legislature to incorporate the town of Vincent, the limits to extend two and a half miles, and nine-tenths of the tax payers within its bounds are kicking worse than a Texas mule so I have been informed. Now, gentlemen, those of you who are dissatisfied with this law had better move to Harpersville, live in town, patronize our school and work good land those of you who are so unfortunate as to have to work. Come one, come all, and you will a hearty welcome find.

B. W. Cosper and J. H. Falkner took in the Mardi Gras festivities at Birmingham last week and report a splendid time.

A large rain fell here last Friday night and creeks and brooklets are overflowing thereby retarding the work of the farmers for some days.

Dixie is glad to note that Governor Johnson has explained away the bad features of the tax commission law and hope that it will be as nice-sailing as he speaks for it. But he has failed so far to show where any body is to be benefited by the oil-inspecting law; a sample of McKinley high-tariff. Yes, it makes a few fat officers.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

On Friday afternoon, March 5th, at two o'clock, the Shelby County Teachers' Institute convened in the high school recitation room, and was opened by singing "Gather In The Golden Grain," after which a prayer was offered by Prof. W. B. Greek.

The program was taken up and each teacher who took part was enthusiastic in their discussions. Showing they had their work at heart. The program was a grand one, and was well disposed of and it was truly proven and felt that there, could not be a grander theme to engross the attention of all classes than that subject which has to do with the training of the intellect—education.

The following teachers were present: Superintendent Eugene Williams, C. H. Florey, Mrs. Florey and Miss Mattie Kendrick, of Vincent, S. J. Strook, Mrs. Strook and Miss Mattie Kidd, of Harpersville; S. S. Crumpton, of Lewis, C. N. Pritchard, of Aldrich, Miss Bell Seale and Osie Curlee, of the Kingdom, Mrs. W. W. Wallace and Miss L. Perryman, of Creswell, Messrs. W. B. Greek, J. E. Bird, Elza Paul, R. L. Hill, Misses Lucy Smith, Ida O'Hara and Elva Greek, of Columbiana.

The institute was visited by Dr. Whittle who did much for the cause by his encouraging remarks, and brief comments on the different topics discussed.

The following resolutions were adopted by the institute:

RESOLVED 1st. That we the teachers of Shelby county, in institute assembled, render our thanks to the kind people of Columbiana for the most hospitable manner in which we have been entertained.

RESOLVED 2nd. That we tender our kindest regards to Rev. W. A. Whittle for his presence and assistance in our work, and that his visit will ever be cherished by our body.

MISS M. C. KENDRICK.
R. L. HILL,
C. N. PRITCHARD.

Owing to the inclemency of the weather the attendance was not so good as it would have been. The institute is ever welcome to meet in our city; we appreciate the teacher, and we, with the world at large, with reverent hands, would crown their efforts with richest honors and success.

Old People.

Old people who require medicine to regulate the bowels and kidneys will find the true remedy in Electric Bitters. This medicine does not stimulate and contains no whiskey or other intoxicant, but acts as a tonic and alternative. It acts mildly on the stomach and bowels, adding strength and giving tone to the organs, thereby aiding nature in the performance of the functions. Electric Bitters is an excellent appetizer and aids digestion. Old people find it just exactly what they need. Price fifty cents per bottle at Parker & Armstrong's drug store.

GIFT BOOTS FOR MCKINLEY.

Soon after the election of McKinley to the presidency, William J. Scott, a well known shoe maker of Lamberts-ville, N. J., wrote to the president congratulating him upon his success and asking him to send his foot measurements, as he wished to make him a pair of boots to wear when inaugurated.

In a few days Scott received a reply from Mr. McKinley thanking him for his good wishes and enclosing the desired measurements. Scott utilized his spare time and completed the boots on Thursday. They are now on exhibition in his shop window, draped with the American flag and looked down upon by Major McKinley's picture above. The boots are made entirely from material of American manufacture, and a better pair could not be made. Thirteen different states are represented by the materials. The legs are maroon, a leather manufactured from goatskin, being soft and pliable. Patent calf was used in making the vamp, which extends part way up the leg, giving a neat finish to the boots, which are known to the trade as "longue boots." The soles are made of white oak tan leather, and are sewed on with linen thread by hand, twenty stitches to the inch. The legs are sewn with black silk. The lining is white kid, as soft as velvet. The height of the boots is fifteen inches and the size seven and a half.

They would be worth at retail $25. When Scott began work on the boots he made himself a new apron, which he used only when working on them, and which he says he will never use again, but will keep as a memento.

People from all over this section, of the country have seen the boots. One man today drove ten miles to see them. Scott says he estimates that over 2,000 people have gazed upon the inaugural boots.

DUN'S COMMERCIAL REVIEW.

Productive Industries and Legitimate Business Steadily Increase, Rapidly Outgrowing Confidence, Yet Nearly Devoid of Elements Involving Unsoundness or Probable Reaction. The Money Markets Especially Favorable to Industrial Recovery.

NEW YORK, March 13.—R. G. Dun & Co. say to-day in their weekly review of trade:

It is a curious illustration of American nature, this continued discouragement, even while the increase of productive industries and of legitimate business steadily grows. No genuine or lasting improvement could come otherwise than slowly and step by step, after such a depression as the past four years have witnessed; and the most hopeful feature of the situation is that the gain is so nearly devoid of elements which involve unsoundness and probable reaction. The money markets continue especially favorable to industrial recovery, and there is no such speculative epidemic as to look up an excessive share of available capital.

The annual statement of wheat in farmers' hands March 1 has not in the least stimulated speculation. Those commonly considered worthy of attention indicate that farmers and commercial supplies together—194,000,000 to 200,000,000 bushels—exceed the outside estimate of home demand, 130,000,000 bushels to July 1, by much more than the quantity likely to be wanted for export in view of the continued outgo of corn, amounting for the past two weeks to 8,800,000 bushels, against 1,591,475 last year.

Wheat exports from Atlantic ports in two weeks have been 2,431,747 bushels, against 2,921,097 last year, and although western receipts are but 3,451,309 bushels for the two weeks against 4,967,392 last year, they are still so large for the season as to disconcert alarms about speedy exhaustion of the supply. The price has declined 3 1/2 cents for the week, and corn is a fraction lower.

Cotton is not active, though a sixteenth higher, for the curtailment of consumption by many mills does not yet help prices in the least, nor the suspension of print cloth reports, and dealers so generally hold back orders for other goods that the tone is weak. The speculation in wool continues, and sales for the two weeks have been 17,903,900 pounds, whereas the largest previous sales for the same period were 12,017,676 pounds in 1892. While there is much trade between dealers, manufacturers show, by purchasing far beyond their present wants, the belief that larger business is coping.

Iron furnaces March 1 were producing 109,900 tons weekly, 7,027 tons, or four per cent. more than February 1, and although visible stocks have increased 8,034 tons in four weeks, still more furnaces have started this month. The demand for finished products still lags behind the supply of pig iron, except in the great steel works whose stocks are not reported, but their orders without doubt cover full production for several months. Bessemer pig is a shade lower, but no other change in quotations appears, and there is gradual increase in the demand for plates, sheets and all the wire family of products. With the advent of spring weather and out door work much more business is expected. The starting of the Maryland rail works under contract with the Carnegie company, in order to make shipments by water more cheaply, is significant.

The chief events in the railroad world have been encouraging. The transfer of the Lehigh Valley to the control of the Morgan and Drexel houses promises important relief and tends to greater harmony of coal interests for the future. At the same time the reduction which will be announced to-day of 25 cents in prices of anthracite coal looks toward a larger demand and better employment in the future.

The reports made to date of railroad earnings in February covers 3,150 miles, 45 per cent. of the total mileage in this country, and the United States roads alone show earnings in that month of $80,383, or only a tenth of one per cent. less than last year, but 10.8 per cent. less than in 1895. The Mexican roads, in most tables included, show an increase of 28.8 per cent., and therefore render returns as to the United States somewhat misleading. March earnings thus far reported show an increase of 3.0 per cent. over last year and the tonnage west bound, as well as the better class of east-bound tonnage, is gradually gaining.

Failures for the past week have been 256 in the United States, against 300 last year; and 61 in Canada, against 60 last year.

HONORED IN THE BREACH.

Gratifying Falling Off in the Number of Immigrants from Europe.

WASHINGTON, March 13.—There has been a decrease in immigration during the past seven months compared with the same period last year of 45,525. Commissioner Stump explains the decrease as follows: "The many deportations and strict examinations of the immigrant to the United States, has caused a large increase of immigration from Europe to Brazil, Argentine Republic and other South American countries, where inducements are held out for their migration. Italian immigration will be seriously checked by the proclamation of the marquis di Rudini, minister of the interior for the kingdom, warning undesirable classes from embarkation and refusing passports.

THE EXTRA SESSION.

Will It be a Working or a Do-Nothing, Waiting Spell? No Decision Has Yet Been Reached—Some Influential Republicans are Urging the Appointment of Committees and the Fixing Up of Time with General Business.

NEW YORK, March 13.—A Sun special from Washington says: No decision has yet been reached by Speaker Reed and the leaders of the old house of representatives, who will also be the leaders of the new, as to whether the programme originally agreed upon of passing the tariff bill and then adjourning from day to day without transacting any business will be carried out. The speaker thinks there is a disposition among members to adhere to this programme, but many influential republicans in and out of congress are opposed to it. They say that, as it will be necessary for the speaker to appoint some of the standing committees, he might as well appoint them all, and if he does that it will be impossible to prevent the introduction and consideration of general legislation. The republican senators are convinced now that while there will be no absolute filibustering against the passage of the tariff bill in the senate, it will be freely amended and fully debated, and that the session will last three months or more. To keep the house in session that length of time without transacting any business, many senators think impracticable, and they are, therefore, advising the speaker to appoint the committees and get the house to work upon the ruling business so that the length of the session next year may be curtailed. One class of republicans, including many influential senators, are impressing upon those leaders the necessity of supplementing the tariff bill by some measure of currency reform in order to relieve the unsatisfactory business conditions. These senators will have a talk with the president on this subject during the next few days, but nothing definite will be decided as to whether the session of the house will be a do-nothing session, except for the passage of the tariff bill, until after the organization has been effected and the pretense made of consulting with the new members.

Having made him president, Mr. Hanna now presents Mr. McKinley invested with new and hitherto unmentioned charms to the gaze of an admiring people. According to this most excellent and ingenious hornblower, the president-elect, even in his capacity for "sleeping, is a peerless character. "I never saw a man like him," rhapsodizes Mr. Hanna. "He can sleep at any time."

At first glance, it would seem that the country should receive this testimonial of the president-elect's capacity for slumber with genuine thankfulness. A man who can sleep well is a safe man as a rule; he has an easy conscience and he is not given to impugning a calm serenity of judgment by indulging in vain worrying. But a too ready facility for sleep on the part of a president—especially when elected to that high office through the friendliness of such interests as were represented by Mr. Hanna—may prove a regrettable possession. The most acute wakefulness on the part of Mr. McKinley in his dealings with the Hanna contingent is to be earnestly desired.—St. Louis Republic.

THE WIDOW RUIZ.

The State Department Will Give Her Case Prompt Consideration.

WASHINGTON, March 13.—Secretary Sherman had a call, by appointment, from Mrs. Ruiz, widow of the man who is alleged to have been murdered in the military prison of Guanabacoa, Cuba, several weeks ago. Mrs. Ruiz was accompanied by her five children and an interpreter, whose presence was needed, as she is unable to speak a word of English. The interview, which lasted about five minutes, was devoted to a pathetic recital of the total destitution of the family and their reliance upon the United States to secure an indemnity from Spain on account of the death of Ruiz, who it is claimed was a naturalized American citizen practicing dentistry for the past 15 years in Cuba. Secretary Sherman, after hearing the complaints, suggested that it would be necessary to put the petition in writing, when the department would give it prompt consideration.

Mrs. Ruiz and her children subsequently called upon the president.

WILL NOT INTERFERE.

Gov. Bradley Will Allow the Law to Take Its Course in the Case of Scott Jackson.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 12.—Scott Jackson, the murderer of Pearl Bryan, must hang at Newport March 20, but there is a report from reliable sources that Alonzo Walling, his accomplice, will be respited for three or four days in order that the governor may have further time to investigate certain features of his plea for executive clemency. Gov. Bradley's refusal to interfere with Jackson's case is as follows:

The verdict of the jury and the judgment of the court are the basis of the law. The court of appeals and the judgment affirmed. On petition for rehearing the opinion was adhered to. Nothing has transpired since which would lead me to believe that the record, and see no reason which would authorize my interference. The pardon is therefore refused.

WILLIAM O. BRADLEY, Governor of Kentucky.

It was announced at the executive office that the Walling case would not be passed upon until to-morrow.

CLERICAL USURPATION.

Roman Catholics Who Voted for a Liberal Candidate in the Ohio Election.

TORONTO, Ont., March 13.—Archbishop Langens of Manitoba, has declared that Roman Catholics who voted for the liberal candidate in the recent bye-election will be refused burial in consecrated ground if they die in their consequent spiritual condition, and also that he reserved to himself the hearing of all confessions of that "sin." The Globe, in commenting on the above, says:

"If the church holding the spiritual guidance of a large section of the Canadian people is allowed to dictate to its members as to what public men and measures they shall support, and to what they shall condemn, and to enforce such decrees by denial of Christian burial and infliction of spiritual penalties, popular government becomes a delusion.

"The people and parliament have too long tolerated clerical domination in political affairs. Such consideration and toleration have been abused, and it is their right and duty to assert and maintain the supremacy of the state in public affairs."

TEN FISHERMEN

Carried Out Into the Lake on a Field of Ice.

BAY CITY, Mich., March 12.—The ice on Saginaw Bay broke loose at a big crack this morning, carrying eight or ten fishermen out into the lake with it. The wind is blowing a gale a little south of west, and it will carry the ice toward Fish Point, where the men may escape to shore. The ice is a foot in thickness, and it is believed there is no danger of their being lost. Their families, who live in West Bay City, are much worried, however.

A GOOD SLEEPER.

McKinley's Docility in the Hands of Boss Hanna.

We again ask the nation to observe the admiration felt by Mr. Hanna for one of Mr. McKinley's special gifts. It did seem difficult before to imagine any condition possible to the president-elect in which the Warwick who placed him at the head of this nation would not contend that he showed his superiority to the ordinary run of mankind. Now he has surely reached the limit.

During the progress of the campaign for the presidency Mr. Hanna took frequent occasion to explain why he had been led to espouse the McKinley cause. He had accidentally met the object of his affections in the course of an unimportant political movement in Ohio and afterwards was thrown with him in the transaction of minor business affairs. Mr. Hanna was impressed by the "sterling quality" of Mr. McKinley's character, his "inflexible honesty of purpose" and his alertness of intellect. He determined that such a man ought logically to be president.

Having made him president, Mr. Hanna now presents Mr. McKinley invested with new and hitherto unmentioned charms to the gaze of an admiring people. According to this most excellent and ingenious hornblower, the president-elect, even in his capacity for "sleeping, is a peerless character. "I never saw a man like him," rhapsodizes Mr. Hanna. "He can sleep at any time."

At first glance, it would seem that the country should receive this testimonial of the president-elect's capacity for slumber with genuine thankfulness. A man who can sleep well is a safe man as a rule; he has an easy conscience and he is not given to impugning a calm serenity of judgment by indulging in vain worrying. But a too ready facility for sleep on the part of a president—especially when elected to that high office through the friendliness of such interests as were represented by Mr. Hanna—may prove a regrettable possession. The most acute wakefulness on the part of Mr. McKinley in his dealings with the Hanna contingent is to be earnestly desired.—St. Louis Republic.

NOT YET SETTLED.

Mr. Bryan Holds That the Money Question is Still an Issue.

"Free Coinage" was the subject of a lecture delivered by William Jennings Bryan at Carnegie hall under the auspices of the New York Bimetallist association. In his speech Mr. Bryan said: "It will not be necessary for me to speak longer than to thank you for the encouragement of your presence, and to express my appreciation of the work which has been done by the advocates of bimetallism in the eastern states. I have never lost an opportunity to assure those who labor for free coinage here that we, who in the west and south have more of local victories to rejoice over, recognize the obstacles which were in your way, and recognize the valor with which you fought. I do not know any democrat, free silver republican or populist who deserves more credit than those who made the fight in New York city. I want to say that your fight here has given you a warm place in the hearts of the west and south.

"Now a word of encouragement. I want to say to those who have fought that the fight is not done. I want to encourage you by saying that I have not found one person who was with us who is sorry that he was with us, and of those who fought under the allied forces not one to-day regrets the part he took on election day and during the campaign.

"I am proud of the work done by the allied forces during the last campaign. No matter what may be the permanent settlement of the money question, the American people are better for the campaign through which they have passed. The government will be better; the laws will be better. The next four years are going to be the hardest for the men who are in politics for pecuniary benefits of any years in recent history.

"I want to say that I do not believe that this money question is yet settled. We are not bitter now than we were before election. I have not reformed. I believe in those principles as much now as then, and it is going to be no easier for monometallists and bimetalists to associate than before. Any man who comes to act with us must be one of us and his sins will be forgiven, but he cannot bring his sins with him."

Senator Mark Hanna.

Gov. Bushnell definitely announces his purpose to appoint Mark Hanna as a senator of the United States to succeed John Sherman. It is an appointment utterly and conspicuously unfit to be made. It is the outcome of a complicated political dicker, which unhappily involves the president-elect himself, as our Canton dispatches show. Mark Hanna has no pretensions whatever to statesmanship. He has neither learning nor experience, neither an acquaintance with public affairs nor skill in their conduct. His solitary claim upon attention is that he raised and disbursed a gigantic campaign fund for the debauchment of American politics. Without that claim upon attention his appointment to the senate would be ludicrous. With it that appointment is a blistering scandal.—N. Y. World.

Hanna's Place.

Mr. Sherman's prospective successor in the senate does not appear overburdened with modesty. He ascribes Bushnell's intention to appoint him to the fact that the sentiment in Ohio toward him (Hanna) was such that Bushnell thought he had better appoint him. This seems a rather ungracious return for the favor promised, and distinctly implies that the governor was forced to make the appointment. Then Mr. Hanna sent his regrets to Detroit, where he

Much apprehension is felt at Memphis on account of the overflow of the Mississippi river. It is feared from the present outlook that the river will change its course, which, should it do, would cause incalculable destruction, both of property and loss of lives.

The Atlanta Journal advises that if you have any confederate states postage stamps don't throw them away. At a recent New York sale a confederate 5c canceled postage stamp sold for $576. Another $102, and other stamps all canceled, anywhere from $8 to $72 each.

Nine suits have been filed against the Southern railway, amounting to $25,000, by the administrators of the Woodward family, who were killed at the Harrison avenue crossing near Chattanooga recently. It seems that Governor Johnston made a wise selection in his appointment of S. B. These are the kind of officers we want as we are not too fond of paying taxes.

A serious shooting affair took place in Birmingham Sunday afternoon in which a young girl was killed and a negro and officer seriously wounded. The death of the girl was caused from a stray shot from the pistol of the officer intended for the negro resisting arrest. It is believed the officer will live but the chances for the negro are doubtful.

Ex-Governor Oates seems to have gotten himself into a rather ridiculous plight by his prosecution of Charles P. Lane for blackmailing. It was at first stated that he had nothing whatever to do with the case but it has developed that he authorized his name both as prosecutor and witness, making himself liable for all costs which he will likely have the pleasure of paying.

Mr. McKinley's message sent in to the 55th Congress Monday is an earnest appeal for a new tariff law, with, of course, a higher rate of duties. If such law is passed it will begin to be felt by fall when we go to purchase our winter clothing as wool will be one of the first commodities effected. However, we prepared ourselves for such things when the republicans went into power.

The statement in the dispatches from Washington to the effect that Secretary Alger, with not a solitary office at his disposal, has on file 3,000 applications for office, recalls to the Savannah News an incident following the inauguration. On the morning after the new president took the oath the crowd of office-seekers at the capital were confronted with a placard on the door of one of the big bureaus reading: "There will be only two vacancies in this bureau. Both are promised."

An L. & N. train had a fearful wreck near Evansville, Ind., on last Wednesday in which five men were killed and several severely wounded. The wreck was caused by the heavy rains having caused White river to overflow, the back water had weakened the trestle leading on to the bridge. It was considered dangerous and trains were ordered to slow up while crossing, but when the cannon ball reached the trestle, although running slow, it fell through into about six feet of water thus causing the fearful accident.

The News desires again to remark that this country of ours is one of great possibilities. A glance at the lives of the members of McKinley's cabinet furnishes more proof on that score. The secretary of state was born in a log cabin. The secretary of the navy and the postmaster-general are the only college graduates. The secretary of the treasury was once a watchman in a lumber yard. The secretary of war and the secretary of the interior are self-made millionaires. The attorney-general is a co-religionist of the lord chief justice, of Great Britain, and the secretary of agriculture is of foreign birth. "Of such a cabinet," correctly observes the New York World, "it can be truly said that it is wholly free from discrimination on account of birth, creed, social antecedents or any form of sectionalism."—Birmingham News.

SENATOR MORGAN ON TRUSTS.

Senator Morgan in a letter published by the New York Journal gives his views clearly regarding trusts and combinations and their control of legislation. The following are a few extracts:

"If the people continue to depend only upon congress to provide the laws, and the federal or central government to execute them, failure will characterize every effort that is made for the suppression of trusts and combinations that are growing in strength year by year.

"These agencies enter into the nomination and election of presidents and the members of congress and it is not to be expected that the men who elect them will permit them to do justice to the people at large.

"The states have the power to control trusts, including even the combinations, and if they exercise these state rights, which have been so clamorously insisted upon in the congress of the United States, for the past hundred years, they will find no serious trouble in bringing about an honest administration of affairs. If the people of New York now sustain this line of policy, in doing the only thing that ever can be effective, to save the people from the various combinations and trusts, they will set an example which the rest of the states will do well to follow.

So long as the tariff remains as it now is, a subject of political exploitation, it must necessarily attract the vigorous and persistent efforts of trusts and combinations to use legislation by congress for their personal emolument.

JOHN T. MORGAN.

A DISMAL FAILURE.

From the Birmingham News.

The woman suffrage business in the state of Colorado has proven a dismal and disgraceful failure. When the legislature of that state was in session the female members were subjected to all kinds of taunts, but it was not long before they became hardened to this sort of thing and themselves indulged in the same species of tactics. They had left their proper sphere and placed themselves on a common level with ordinary male politicians and could scarcely have expected treatment otherwise than would have been accorded men holding the same office.

This was bad enough, but now comes a story from Denver that at a populist convention in which women participated, the proceedings were marked by the free use of such epithets as "liar" and finally ended by two females pouncing upon a be-whiskered populist and tearing out his facial hair.

The News has heretofore been inclined to view with favor the woman suffrage idea as a possible resort for the securing of purer politics. But if the Colorado experiment is a true test of its operation, then it is a thing not to be desired. Whatever tends to render a female corpse as objectionable and this has been the outcome in the Centennial State at least among those women who have taken an active part in politics. All the world admires the womanly woman, but abominates the coarse creature.

The time for women to vote, to take part in political conventions and to serve in legislative halls evidently has not arrived. Let us hope it never will if the result is to be as it has been in Colorado.

THE BEET SUGAR INDUSTRY.

From the Savannah News.

The sugar that comes from Germany is made from beets. And the beet, it is believed, is the solution of the sugar problem in the United States. Sugar beets can be grown successfully in probably a greater portion of the country. They need a plenty of sunshine and atmosphere containing but little moisture, hence the higher lands of the southern states would seem to offer just the proper conditions. It has been demonstrated in California and elsewhere on the Pacific coast that beets as rich in sugar as can be produced in the world can be grown in the United States.

Southern farmers could do no better than make inquiries with regard to sugar beets, with a view to cultivate them. The farmers must look to something besides cotton as a money crop, a fact of which they are well aware. They examined into the prospects for growing ramic, but were compelled to give up the idea of going into the business. The want of a practical and cheap decorticating machine and process makes the profitable production of ramic in this country out of the question. There are no great difficulties surrounding the cultivation of sugar beets. Anybody with even meager knowledge of farming can grow them.

Beet sugar cultivation upon a somewhat large scale is to be undertaken in South Carolina, so it has been announced. The farmers of this state, and other adjoining states, could come to an understanding which would in all probability secure the establishing of beet sugar factories at convenient places, thus making a market for the beets. Each farmer could plant a few acres of beets at first, and gradually enlarge the operations as the occasion demanded or best interests suggested. There would then be no more total dependence upon cotton as a money crop.

A baby buggy is a good thing but few men like to "push it along." The rippling music of rivulets between their grassy banks, the rustling of June leaves and the music of birds could in no wise compete with the sweet music of the serenade Monday evening.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

HALL OF SHELBY LODGE No. 140, A. F. & A. M., COLUMBIANA, ALA., FEBRUARY 27, 1897.

Whereas, It was the will of the Supreme Grand Master to call from labor to refreshment, on the 29th day of January, 1897, our esteemed brother, John A. West, in the 69th year of his age; and

Whereas, Bro. West had been a member of our Lodge about 35 years and was Worshipful Master at the time of his death; and

Whereas, He was a zealous Mason, a faithful friend and brother, being social and genial, kind and true, and had within him implanted by nature, the true principles of Masonry. Therefore, he is resolved,

1. That while we mourn the loss of our brother and lament the fact that we are never again to meet him in this Hall, it is the order of the Supreme Grand Master, and it is only left us to yield in humble submission to his will, and to prepare to meet him in that Celestial Lodge above where parting will be no more.

Resolved 2d, That Bro. West was a worthy exponent of the noble principles of our order, and his loss gives feelings of grief to our entire membership. And that his virtues should be emulated and cherished by this lodge over which he was presiding at the time of his death, and his faults be covered with the mantle of charity, and his name go down to future generations as a bright light in our Masonic Temple.

Resolved 3d, That a page in the records of Shelby Lodge No. 140, be appropriated to his memory, on which shall be written his name, age and date of death, and that our members wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days, and that the altar be draped in mourning for the same length of time.

Resolved 4th, That we extend our sincere sympathy to the bereaved wife and children, and ask that the sweet peace of God's love abide with them commending them to the Holy Spirit.

Resolved 5th, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the widow of the deceased, and also furnished the PEOPLE'S ADVOCATE and Chronicle for publication, and that they be spread on the minutes of the lodge.

From Lewis and Four Mile.

Rain! Rain! And still it rains.

Messrs. J. H. and Arthur Riddle, of Helena, visited relatives on Four Mile last week.

Why don't everybody who would like to keep up with the times subscribe for The Chronicle?

Miss Gussie Cross, of Pelham, is visiting relatives on Four Mile.

Mr. Wilson, Hanover, Ala., spent Sunday last on Four Mile with Miss Myrtle Jackson.

Services once a month at Four Mile on fourth Sunday, conducted by Rev. R. A. Kidd, of Vincent.

Profs. J. A. Spearman and W. J. Horsley are our champion rail splitters, as they split 1650 in one day. That is remarkably well, isn't it Jake?

Several of our young people enjoyed a singing given at Mrs. Cross's Saturday night.

From the present indications we all predict a very large fruit crop. And most all our farmers say they are going to plant a large water melon patch and we are going to invite our city friends out to feast with us.

Wheat is surely the finest at this time of year ever before known. It is simply beautiful. If we have no cold weather to interfere with its rapid growth it will be ready for harvest in May.

Dr. Smothers, of Yellow Leaf, passed through our community last week. The doctor has an extensive practice and is now assisted by his brother just returned from college at Mobile.

Miss Minnie Ray, of Lewis, will enter school at Wilsonville, Monday, March 15th inst.

Seab Jackson's infant that was so badly burned a few weeks ago is slowly improving.

Fred, of the Advocate, I notice is kindly boasting of Four Mile's pretty girls and says they are so "numerous." I can agree with him on their good looks, but girls on Four Mile are getting to be almost as scarce as hens teeth, but what few there are, are very pretty.

Enmet Welch was here Monday pushing the grocery business. Fifteen cars of commercial fertilizers have been delivered from this point this season.

Miss Minnie Kidd, who has been assisting Prof. Kilpatrick in his school has returned to her home at Vincent.

W. C. Evans is assisting J. B. Kilpatrick with his school since the departure of Miss Kidd. He is a promising and industrious gentleman and we are pleased to have him with us.

Monday about noon a great conflict occurred between two white men and one colored man; no damage was done no lives lost and no blood shed but a large quantity of gas escaped from the vocal chords of the white men, and a practical illustration of perpetual motion was exhibited by the running gear of the colored man.

Prof. Kilpatrick, in ordering a shipment of wire fencing, requested the shippers promptness in the matter as he wanted a spring garden. Parties on billing out the wire sent it to spring Garden, Alabama, and after considerable tracing he has at last received the goods, and another Spring Garden in Alabama is on a boom.

The S. P. L. League will assemble at the Wilsonville Institute next Friday night. We are making a special effort to have a nice program for the evening. Come, friends, and lend us your helping hand.

If the cross tie inspector should make his welcome appearance in town and spot a few thousand ties a broad grin, like unto that of a man that has just been made the happy papa of twin boys, would play over the countenance of several of the merchants for sometime to come.

The citizens of Wilsonville met at the academy Saturday afternoon and made the necessary nominations for officers to fill the positions of the city council.

Edison's Latest Wonderful Discovery.

Thomas A. Edison, says a New York correspondent, is soon to startle the world with another wonderful discovery. Not content with giving to mortals the incandescent lamp, the graphophone, the kinetoscope and the fluoroscope, he now proposes to make the human body transparent. In a word, it will be possible one of these days literally to "see through a man." Heretofore post-mortem examinations have been necessary in order to understand the mysterious make-up of some people. If Mr. Edison's expectations are realized, however, the same result can be reached by an ante-mortem diagnosis, and the secrets of the human "prisonhouse" disclosed before the breath leaves the body. To be brief, the wizard has just discovered a new chemical common in his new laboratory at Llewellyn Park, that promises to revolutionize surgery and even the broader domain of science. Indeed, to state the exact facts, Mr. Edison has succeeded in manufacturing a number of new crystals which offer great possibilities in connection with the fluoroscope. Several of them in particular hold out the hope that physicians may, sooner or later, see the exact position and condition of the internal organs of their patients.

A Funny Invention.

One of the funniest inventions of this inventive age is a machine invented by a farmer out in Madison county, Kentucky, for catching flies off the backs of cattle. This fly-catcher is described as a sort of covered pen or passageway, through which the animal must walk to secure relief from flies. A few feet from the entrance is a cupola or dome, made of glass, in the roof of the passageway, and this, on the fly-trap principle, catches the flies, and it is done in his way: The animal walks through the machine, and just as it passes under the dome, a set of brushes sweeps off the flies, which are caught in the dome trap. The invention has found that the animals soon learn the value of the machine, for when the flies begin to pester them they immediately walk through the machine. And that is the funny part of it.

Exercise.

From the New York Mail and Express.

The latest idea in physical culture is the rule, when you are tired from worry or overstudy, or excessive office work, don't lie down to rest, but go to a gymnasium, fencing class or bowling alley and get the blood running rapidly through the muscles and nerves.

It is not altogether new, as many doctors and ex-college athletes have long since adopted the system and commended it to their friends. A distinguished lawyer in this city has what might be termed a gymnasium in one of the rooms of his office downtown, and every day when tired from the confinement of court, he goes through a vigorous programme of difficult exercises.

The result is that, although past the half century mark, he is still a perfect model of physical strength and excellence.

THE SOUTHERN RAILWAY'S EXHIBIT AT THE TENNESSEE CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Arrangements have been perfected by which the Southern Railway's territory will be represented at the exposition which opens at Nashville on May 1. This, like former exhibits made by that company, will include sample specimens of mineral, agricultural, forest and other products of the states of Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, East Tennessee and Kentucky. This company's exhibit at the Atlanta and Pittsburg Expositions attracted the attention of the agriculturist, manufacturer, miner, stock-raiser and others, and did more to educate the visitors to an appreciation of the great wealth and possibilities of the South than any other one exhibit that was shown, and it is the policy of the company to actively continue this method of advertising. The scenic beauties of the country through which the Southern Railway runs will not be neglected in this exhibit.

Practically, this exhibit will be a bureau of information, so that visitors from the North and abroad can obtain specific data relative to all branches of industry in and tributary to the vast number of points on the Southern Railway.

This exhibit is under the direction of the Land and Industrial Department of the Southern Railway with headquarters at Washington, D. C., and persons located along that system having exhibit material that they think will interest the public and thereby help advance the best interest of the section from which it comes, should at once communicate with the agent of that department.

This is an exhibit in which every citizen of this section should be interested, and we hope that some of our readers can supply something to represent our territory.

Cleveland's Record.

President Cleveland has filled so prominent a place in the history of the United States that he is not likely to be forgotten. During his last administration, the business of the country was in a great measure stagnant. With his convictions of duty, he found himself at outs with his party and drifted away from them on the free coinage of silver. It is consistent with the truth of history to say that Mr. Cleveland's convictions on this vital issue were the same before that they were after his nomination as president. However much our people may disagree with Mr. Cleveland on the financial question, they remember with gratitude his friendship for the South. No president ever manifested more devotion than he in doing justice to the rights of the states, and in recognizing the worth and ability of southern men by calling them to places of honor and usefulness in every department of the government. During his administration, the south has been restored to her rightful place in the union. For this our people should be ever grateful. In his retirement, Mr. Cleveland has his gracious good will for peace, happiness and long life.—Augusta Chronicle.

The following special to the Montgomery Advertiser is of great interest to fourth-class postmasters: "Postmaster General Gary made the definite announcement today that the administration, after deliberations, has decided to adhere to the four-year tenure of office policy for all postmasters. He stated that except in a few cases where removal for cause was requested on account of delinquency, incompetency or other instances of unsatisfactory conduct or administration of the office, all postmasters, fourth-class as well as those of presidential appointment, would be allowed to serve out a term of four years. This official statement of policy is one of the most important so far determined upon by the administration, and has been awaited with great interest by the patrons of the 70,675 postoffices throughout the country.

It is, or should be, the highest aim of every merchant to please his customers; and that the wide-awake drug firm of Meyers & Esheleman, Sterling, Ill., is doing so, is proven by the following, from Mr. Esheleman: "In my sixteen years' experience in the drug business I have never seen or sold or tried a medicine that gave as good satisfaction as Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy." Sold by J. E. Seale & Co., Druggists.

A man stands no chance of being elected to the mayorship of a city unless he enjoys the confidence and esteem of his neighbors. Geo. W. Humphrey is the popular mayor of Swanton, Ohio, and under date of Jan. 17 1896, he writes as follows: "This is to certify to our appreciation of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. My family and neighbors have tested it, and we know it is an excellent remedy for coughs and colds.—George W. Humphrey." Sold by J. E. Seale & Co., Druggists.

Tetter, Salt-Rheum and Eczema. The intense itching and smarting incident to these diseases, is instantly allayed by applying Chamberlain's Eye and Skin Ointment. Many very bad cases have been permanently cured by it. It is equally efficient for itching piles and a favorite remedy for sore nipples, chapped hands, chilblains, frost bites and chronic sore eyes. 25 cts. per box.

Dr. Cady's Condition Powders, are just what a horse needs when in bad condition. Tonic, blood purifier and vermifuge. They are not food but medicine and the best in use to put a horse in prime condition. Price 25 cents per package.

The editor of The Review of Reviews calls attention to the significant fact that England has never known such prosperity and never attained such greatness as during the reigns of her queens. Of course it is merely by coincidence that a queen should give England her golden Elizabethan age; that Queen Anne's reign should pass into history as England's Augustan age, and that the glorious Victorian age, now unhappily drawing to a close, should have given England such greatness and prosperity as the world had never dreamed of. Of course it is merely a peculiar, unaccountable coincidence that such things should occur when the sovereignty is vested in a woman, but we do not write other history on the happen-so hypothesis.

I desire to attest to the merits of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy as one of the most valuable and efficient preparations on the market. It broke an exceedingly dangerous cough for me in 24 hours, and in gratitude therefor, I desire to inform you that I will never be without it and you should feel proud of the high esteem in which your remedies are held by people in general. It is the one remedy among ten thousand. Success to it.—O. R. Downey, Editor Democrat, Albion, Ind. For sale by J. E. Seale & Co., Druggists.

A will 4,000 years old has been unearthed in Egypt and admitted to probate. It must have been a woman's will, or it would never have had its way after such a lapse of time.—Memphis Commercial-Appeal.

On the morning of Feb. 20, 1895, I was sick with rheumatism, and lay in bed until May 21st, when I got a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. The first application of it relieved me almost entirely from the pain and the second afforded complete relief. In a short time I was able to be up and about again.—A. T. Moreaux, Luverne, Minn. Two Lives Saved.

Mrs. Phoebe Thomas, of Junction City, Ill., was told by her doctors she had consumption, and that there was no hope for her, but two bottles Dr. King's New Discovery completely cured her and she says it saved her life. Mr. Thos. Eggers, 139 Florida St., San Francisco, suffered from a dreadful cold, approaching consumption, tried without result everything else then bought one bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery and in two weeks was cured. He is naturally thankful. It is such results, of which there are samples, that prove the wonderful efficacy of this medicine in coughs and colds. Free trial bottles at Parker & Armstrong's drug store. Regular size 50c and $1.00.

Our Public Roads.

We would like to call the special attention of the grand jury to the public roads of our county. They are certainly a disgrace. At present it is hardly possible to drive with a light buggy over any of the roads leading into town. We realize, of course, that the fearful rains of the past few weeks would naturally put the roads in a bad condition, but not as they now are, if worked properly.

We think our road commissioners and apportioners should be more particular whom they appoint as overseers. Travel, if you please, over one of our roads and note the judgement and discretion displayed in the work thereon. The work they have done, instead of improving, has been a detriment to them. For instance, they invariably, in throwing dirt, from the ditches, place it on the sides of the roads, thus making the center the lowest point and forcing water to run therein.

We wish to congratulate W. G. Parker for the good and efficient work he is putting on our streets and would cite this work as an example for our road overseers to pattern after. We trust those whose duty it is to look after these things, will investigate the matter and take immediate steps to remedy this great disgrace to our county.

PACE-CROMWELL.

On last night without the knowledge save of a few friends, Mr. James Pace was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Miss Addie Cromwell. Rev. W. L. Simmott having been engaged to perform the ceremony, it was arranged that the marriage should take place immediately before prayer-meeting. Promptly at the hour, 7:30, the time set for this service the groom entered the door of the Presbyterian church with his lovely bride leaning upon his arm, and without any attendants, or march being played, slowly marched up the aisle and were united by a beautiful service by Mr. Simmott. The Chronicle joins with their many friends in wishing them all the happiness possible and trusts their pathway shall ever be strewn with life's richest blessings.

The name of the college at Montevallo, having been recently changed to the Alabama Polytechnic Institute for Girls, under the management of the brainy and indefatigable president is fast becoming a grand success. Capt. H. C. Reynolds won the distinction when young, by virtue of his bravery and untiring energy, of being the eyes and ears of the army, and now like the immortal Lee by the use of the same faculties he is making his name great in the pursuit of his duties in this capacity. We truly wish him great success as this Institute in whose behalf he is laboring so assiduously is capable of accomplishing a noble work in education.

The ladies of the Baptist church were busy several days of last week superintending the putting down of a carpet in their church. Through the efforts of W. G. Parker, windows were obtained and placed in the vestibule and the church is now entirely completed. This is certainly commendable on their part to show such interest in this cause and the improvement in the looks of the church will, we are sure, fully repay their efforts.

Mustang Walter and Captain A. G. Shaw's Wild West Show will remain in Columbiana for three days more. A grand fight drawing will take place on Saturday night which will distribute many beautiful and useful presents to parties holding lucky numbers. This show is well worthy of your patronage, so be sure and go out and enjoy a good laugh.

A ticket for our next municipal election was gotten up and filed before the mayor, in compliance with the law, Tuesday. There was some opposition at first and an endeavor to form another ticket but this having failed we will now have but one ticket in the field.

The show which has been in progress here for the past three days was a first class entertainment, considering the price of admission. On account of the rainy weather the attendance was small and we fear their receipts were hardly adequate to their expenses.

Vincent Locals.

EDITOR CHRONICLE: I have often wondered why such an interesting paper, one with such a wide circulation as The Chronicle should have no correspondent from the enterprising little town of Vincent. So without further preliminaries I rap for admittance at the door of your office with the recent happenings of our city.

J. M. Wilder spent several days of last week in Birmingham.

Miss Minnie Kidd, who has been assisting Prof. Kilpatrick, of Wilsonville, in his school, is at home again to the delight of her many friends. But it will not be so convenient for her brother B. to send her flowers, since she does not board with the same young lady.

G. C. Pitts paid Sylacauga a visit last week.

W. A. Blair is with us again. We are always glad to welcome him back. W. J. Florey, of Harpersville, spent Sunday on East Highlands. Mr. Florey, such persistence will certainly win the day, sooner or later.

Miss Lura Perryman, of Creswell, spent Saturday and Sunday here, the guest of Miss Mattie Kendrick. Ask either of them how they like to attend teachers' institutes.

Rev. W. J. Ray, of Howard College, passed through Sunday afternoon on his way from home.

The Ennominan Literary Society could not have their debate Friday evening on account of the inclemency of the weather. Quite a disappointment to all since these treats are only once a month.

Brother R. A. Kidd filled the Baptist pulpit both morning and evening, each service being well attended.

The ladies of the Baptist church have organized themselves into a society—Cheerful Helpers, whose aim is the advancement of the cause of Christ in any and every way possible. Their meetings are very interesting and all are cordially invited to attend; the second and fourth Sabbath afternoons at four o'clock.

In reply to our friend Jake, of Harpersville, will say: Compare Harpersville and Vincent and you will readily see that it is not age that makes a town but the enterprise of her citizens. Harpersville is one hundred years old, whereas Vincent is only ten. I am sure it is not necessary to note the marked difference in the two places. Now as to importing speakers for the next debate in order to entertain the young men of Harpersville, will say: That it has ever been foreign to the desires of the speakers of Vincent or any of the young ladies of the town to entertain any of that class of young men in Harpersville or any other similar community. Our next debate will be to entertain all sensible visitors, and the wide awake citizens of Vincent and surrounding country.

Our school is doing good work now. The following is the honor roll for the month ending March 5, 1897, arranged according to class standing: May Chandler, Ethel Bilibrey, May Bell, Sim Darnell, Nannie Davis, Oscar McGraw, Gussie Lide, Mariana McGraw, Opal Kidd, Edgar Kidd, Jada Davis, Lillie Raley, Mary Kidd, James Chandler, Laura Elliott, Ruby Kidd, Annie Williams, Nellie Kidd, Ola Jennings, Nettie Milam and George Darnell.

Items from Creswell.

Mrs. Hyde, of near Odessa, came over Monday to visit J. T. Wheat's family.

Miss Lura Perryman made a pleasant visit to Vincent Saturday and Sunday.

Miss Virginia Anderson and G. M. Douglas have up a big case—the mumps. E. E. and J. M. Wallis are also victims of the same disease this week. Your humble scribe has just passed over that part of the fun(?)

Miss Hattie Payton came down from Sterrett last Friday and spent until Monday with relatives and friends here. May her visits be often and long.

Mrs. Ellen Hammett, of Vincent, spent Saturday and Sunday at this place.

Mrs. J. H. Coleman was called to Trondale Sunday on account of the sickness of her son, S. V. Coleman.

Rev. W. J. Ray filled his appointment at this place last Sunday and preached an excellent sermon from the text: "And they stood every man in his place round about the camp," Judges, 7: 21. He handled his subject creditably. He preached at this place again the second Sunday in April.

Mrs. N. F. Judge came down from Birmingham last week to spend a while at her old home here.

E. E. Wallis and little sister Ada and E. M. Cosper came near having a serious accident near their home last Thursday night. While driving along a very deep railroad cut at a fast gate one wheel of the buggy struck a telegraph post, knocking the buggy into the cut and turning it bottom side up, just as a freight train approached near by at full speed. Luckily the buggy did not fall entirely on the track and the occupants escaped without any one being hurt.

Fred Praither and S. A. Guy, of the bridge gang, went over to Sylacauga Sunday.

J. W. Brown, Sylacauga, was over on business Monday and Tuesday.

CHOCTAW.

Weldon News Items.

Rain, rain, rain. Guano haling, road working and logging are the order of the day here. Owing to the rain the farmers are delayed about planting corn.

Ollie Holcomb, son of T. B. Holcomb, fell from the top of a house a few days ago and was hurt very badly. Glad to say is not dangerous.

Thomas Blackberry, of Wilsonville, was among his many friends here Sunday.

The singing at F. M. Walton's Wednesday night was very good and enjoyed by all present. Let us have some more good singing.

McKinley is now our president and some of the people are saying prosperity will increase. We don't believe that prosperity, whiskey and politics will pull together, but hope and trust that there may be some way fixed to do away with the making and selling of whiskey, for it is ruining society and churches ever where and is landing many in a drunkard's grave.

A Valuable Prescription.

Editor Morrison, of Worthington, Ind., "Sun," writes: You have a valuable prescription in Electric Bitters, and I can cheerfully recommend it for Constipation and Sick Headache, and as a general system tonic it has no equal." Stories and Sketches from Down on Rocky Creek.

Maj. Jim Ellington and His Jersey Male Cow—"Old Necessity" Xoogins Put a Dead Defendant on Trial.

Old Maj. Jim Ellington—which he lives over on yonder side of Murder creek, and may his tribe increase forever—has been laid up for repairs two or three weeks and dally in around tremulousness close to the valleys and the shadows. What has been the matter with him? A whole pabble has been the matter with him, white people, and as John Andrew Milligan is so wont to say, that puts me in mind of a story.

Silas, son of Rex, "Responded." You must recollect in the outstart, patient and long-suffering reader, that old Maj. Ellington is a stavin' big man in his day and generation—pulls up the beam at somethin' better than 200 pounds, and stands full six feet in his socks. Most everybody in the settlement calls him the Giant of Murder Creek, and the name fits the man to a nat's bristle.

Sometime along induring of the Christmas the old major he lit out and bought himself rich with a full-blooded Jersey male cow—which he called his name Silas, son of Rex, and turned him loose down in the woods paster. Now in the meantime it would seem like Bunk Weatherford had got all the records and pedigrees in the case, and he was good enough to ride by there one cold day and tell Maj. Ellington that Silas, son of Rex, was from fightin' stock and would hunt him if he didn't keep up a mighty close watch.

But Bunk Weatherford and the rest of the boys—first one and then another—have played off so many yaller dog tricks on the old major, till by gracious he never can get for certain whether they are workin' up a joke or preachin' forth the truth. Anyhow, it now looks as if what Bunk Weatherford told the major in regards to Silas, son of Rex, went in at one ear and come out at the other. And late one evein' when Silas, son of Rex, come up to the lick log to take salt the old major he went out there and took up a reckless notion all of a sudden that he would try and find out whether Bunk Weatherford had spoke the truth or put out a scandalation.

So in the next place the major stooped down, turned his coat over his head and snorted loud and mannish like he was mad. Whereas, Silas, son of Rex, bowed up his neck and rolled his eyes and responded back at him with a loud snort. The major then paved the earth a little with his hands and throwed up the dirt higher than his back. Silas, son of Rex, likewise also paved the earth and flung up dirt considerable. Then the major he belloved as loud and strong as he could. Silas, son of Rex, responded back and belloved, too. Now, as to what then come to pass out there at the lick log, let the various and sundry wounds and scars and bruises which have stood forth on the hefty farm of the Giant of Murder Creek speak for themselves and tell the "sad and orful story." At any rates, from the way the ground was tore up for 20 feet around—from the general appearances of the case and from what the boys tell me—it would seem as if what Silas, son of Rex, done to Maj. Jim Ellington was a most "hellationous plenty."

But for the fact that some of the hands out at the lot saw the cloud of dust risin' and heard the old major call in for help at the top of his voice, nobody knows but what before now we would of had another sad case of singin' and slow walkin' over at the old Ebenezer graveyard. They piled in thick and fast with fence rails and finally at last run Silas, son of Rex, off of the major. Then they bore the wounded into the house and sent for two or three doctors.

It is now more than probable, from all I can pick up, that the major will recover and come around on his feet once more in the fullness of time. And as to Silas, son of Rex, he is still runnin' at large down in the woods paster. The Dead on Trial. Squire Xoogin, justice of the peace in and for Rocky Creek Beat—old "Necessity," as the boys are wont to call him—had the gonebyest most strangest case up for trial in his court one day last week that will ever go down on the pages of ancient history. But if you never would of thought it I know, but if Squire Xoogin didn't try a dead nigger on the charge of totin' a concealed pistol and find him guilty, then mother is a widder and I ain't married. And from all the general facts which have leaked out in the case, this is the way it come to pass.

Bright and early one mornin' last week a well-known colored citizen, of third person, single number and African gender, by the name of Reed Gillam showed up dead down at Little Wolf Creek bridge. Old "Necessity" he soon got the news and nothin' would do but he must sail right in and call a jury and have a trial on the mortal remains.

When they all got down to the bridge and everything was ready for the trial, Squire Xoogin he searched the dead and found a pistol and seven dollars in the late unlamented Reed Gillam's pockets. The jury soon returned a verdict to the general extent that the said Reed Gillam had come to his death in some way unknown to the world. And right on the heels of that old "Necessity" writ out papers of compellment and had the dead man brung up for trial in court on the charge of totin' concealed weapons. Col. Rans Hooker was appointed as the attorney to prosecute the case. They tell me he made a most tremendous and powerful speech in the name of law and order, and for the honor and dignity of the state. In less than three minnits the squire give out his judgment and found the dead defendant guilty as charged in the papers of compellment, and fined him five dollars and costs.

Naturally, of course, Squire Xoogin and Col. Hooker they didn't do a blessed thing then but whack up and divvy on the pile. The squire held ($5) five dollars for the fine and costs, whilst the colonel he took ($2) two dollars and the pistol for his fees as prosecuting attorney in this case.

Which the same that puts me in mind of how Squire Xoogin got his pet name. In a famous case a few years ago Bled Scroggins got his bristles up and loved the squire was like necessity, for the reason that necessity knows no law. And henceforth for a while after that his pet name in the settlement has been old "Necessity."

Cis Bradley's Bad Break. Old man Cis Bradley died the other day at the home of the departed one on Huckleberry ridge, and so far as I am concerned I do fervently hope he has now crossed over to that other land of light and sunshine and flowers.

But if in the run of time it was to come my way to live right on in this wide and wicked world for a hundred years to come, I don't see how I could ever remember the time when old man Cis made a sound. But he had break a my grandfather's house one cold and stormy winter night.

Up to about that time—which he was then pushin' 60 mighty close—old man Cis had been a terrible wild and wayward and wicked man. He had traveled all the gaits and covered all the ground—drinkin' and cussin' and fightin' and carousin' and carryin' on to beat six bits. But in the summer before that they had a big protracted meetin' down at old Cool Springs church. There was a tremendous outpourin' and a mighty rattlin' in the valley of dry bones for several days, and consequently old man Cis had cast out about 17 devils, as it were, and come over on the right side.

From then on through the fall the old man felt every inch of his ground. But he had went to town that day—which if I remember right it was in the Christmas, and the weather, you understand, was cold as fluegins. Human nature was human then—the same as it is now and always will be—and old man Cis he slipped and fell. First and last durin' the day he climbed up around sundry and numerous drinks, and when he started out on his return back home he was needin' of a jug before he could tote any more.

When he rid up to grandfather's house that night he was most serenely and feloniously drunk. But you see grandfather had preached the very sermon which brought old Cis out of darkness into light, and then when the old man got drunk and feelin' rale sick and mean about it he didn't have no better sense than come a bilin' over to see his preacher and fess up to the error of his ways.

Well do I recollect that when old man Cis come into the house that night we had built a roarin' big fire, and the longer he hung around the family hearthstone the drunker he got, till, bless gracious, if it didn't look like he would go to sleep and fall over in it. Till this very minnit I can see the sad but lovin' look on my grandfather's face as he took in the general circumference of the calamity and spoke up and said:

"We will now have family prayers, brother Bradley, and then all retire to bed."

"That's all right, parson," says old man Cis as he shut one eye to keep from seein' doubt, "go right on with the prayer meetin'. Facts are I ruther think it stam good idea."

Raley now, I reckon it was wrong. I never did even sorter try to make out like it was right. But when the family prayers had been held I sneaked off to my trunk and bed out in the shed room and laughed and laughed and laughed, till I got tired and dropped off to sleep.

MASKS FOR AGE.

They Serve But to Increase the Marks of Time.

The host and hostess at an English country house offered a strange contrast in appearance as they entertained their guests from opposite ends of the table. In reality the husband was eight years older than his wife, but he looked 20 years younger. How this came about may readily be explained.

The lady could not endure the thought that she was growing old. For years she had dyed her hair and eyebrows, enamelled her forehead and neck and painted her cheeks.

Every artifice which she employed to conceal the signs of advanced years only served to make her look older. As she sat at table with her guests she seemed to be wearing a mask which did not fit her. Everyone could see the paint and rouge and understood why it was that she never smiled.

"Her ladyship has a good sense of humor," remarked one of the guests in the smoking-room in an aside to a companion, "but she never laughs at my stories, much as she would like to do so. She cannot smile, poor lady, after her toilet is made for the evening. Her face is steeled against all jokes. I don't know what would happen if she were to laugh heartily. Her rigid face, with its dyes and paint, would break up and go to pieces."

"Yes," was the reply, "she is aging fast, and cannot last long. But how young and sprightly our host appears!" His hair was gray and growing thin, but no one noticed it as an indication of age. He had a fresh, natural complexion, and a fine glow of health in his cheeks. Making no attempt whatever to disguise his age, and laughing merrily at every jest, he seemed one of the youngest men in the party. So youthful was he in appearance and flow of spirits that nobody thought of him as he really was—a man "well stricken in years."

A well-known London lady of fashion started her friends one night by appearing in a drawing-room with hair almost white. Many acquaintances recognized her with difficulty. They had been accustomed to seeing her with jet black hair.

"Oh, yes," she exclaimed, when rallied upon her change in appearance. "I am weary of having my hair dyed every week! I am going to run the risk of being called an old woman."

But in reality she had not taken any risk of having her increasing age commented upon. She looked younger with her white hair than she had in her complexion black dye. Her face and complexion were brightened by contrast, and she was handsomer and more youthful than before.

In order to grow old gracefully one must not be unduly anxious to cheat Father Time out of his dues. A contented spirit is the best-fitting mask for age.—Youth's Companion.

CLEVERLY MANAGED.

The Master Stroke of a Matrimonial Match Maker.

In an Illinois town a Miss Blizard lately demonstrated practically beyond question the truth of the old saying so strenuously insisted upon by many women: "The quickest way to reach a man's heart is through his stomach."

Miss Blizard kept a select boarding house, and among her patrons were Mr. William D. McBride and Miss Addie May McDowdell. In view of subsequent developments, the assumption is warranted that Miss Blizard, liking those two young people very much indeed, reached the inevitable feminine conclusion that the best thing such a nice couple could do was to fall in love with each other as promptly as possible, get married and live happily ever afterward.

It was a genial and friendly conclusion to reach, and it should not be unsafe to say that, having arrived at it, Miss Blizard lost no time in herself assuming the role of the "god in the machine" and so guiding events as to inevitably bring about the final blissful denouement upon which her kindly heart was set. It is easy to understand that, having Mr. McBride and Miss McDowdell under the same roof with her, Miss Blizard was mistress of the situation to an unusual degree, and it is to be presumed that she worked those two young people one against the other in every way likely to make each see the other's good points in the very strongest light possible.

But she did more. With the pulse of the situation under her touch always, it would seem that Miss Blizard knew to a nicety just when the crucial moment was reached, and at that crucial moment, knowing that Mr. McBride's sex made it imperative that he should take the initiative in bringing matters to a climax, the crafty Miss Blizard played her strongest card. She prepared a little supper aimed at the very citadel of Mr. McBride's affections, and at that supper she saw to it that Mr. McBride was helped to the choicest of each and every dish. The happy man was feasted like a lord, with pretty Miss McDowdell fawning him as he feasted.

Miss Blizard rose from the table a winner. During the very progress of the momentous repast, Mr. McBride's heart melted within his bosom, and gazing fondly upon Miss McDowdell, he then and there challenged her to become Mrs. McBride. The challenge was accepted, a license procured, a minister was summoned, friends were bidden to the joyous scene and the knot was tied.

Miss Blizard deserves a roseate immortality. Her healthy confidence in the irresistible nature of the conjunction of good things to eat with a pretty girl to look at warrants the conspicuous perpetuation of her memory.—St. Louis Republic.

HOUSEHOLD SUGGESTIONS.

Some Small Items of Useful Information.

A mirror should never stand or be hung where the sun's rays fall upon it. The light and heat produce a chemical disintegration of the quicksilver at the back, which injures the reflective power and makes the glass seem dim and dull.

Many cooks believe the white meal, made from southern corn, is superior to the yellow, made from that grown at the north. Nevertheless a Johnny cake doesn't seem to advertise itself as such unless it is a golden yellow. The yellow meal is very sweet and nice.

Beans soaked 24 hours in tepid water and then cooked a short time only, merely long enough to make them tender and well done, and beans put on to cook with little or no soaking and boiled a long time, are quite two separate and distinct dishes. And if you don't believe it you may demonstrate it by experiment.

Those soaked the longest will be by far the most appetizing. In cooking the breakfast table cereals the object is to give them a chance to absorb water and to cook the starch thoroughly. The larger and drier the grain the more time must be allowed for the accomplishment of this result. Whole grains are improved by a previous soaking; those that are finely ground must be mixed with cold water to prevent the formation of lumps. Others should be sifted through the fingers into boiling salted water. Cook fast at first, then more slowly over boiling water, covered, and without stirring.—Detroit Free Press.

Drinking Contaminated Water.

Water that is left standing in the kitchen or bedroom, and, above all, in the sick room, over night is liable to contamination by the absorption of impurities aloft in the air in such rooms and to be rendered wholly unfit for use. No matter that the water is cold, even to near freezing; it is so much more liable to absorb and hold in solution the foul gases and organic particles to which it has been exposed. It is dangerous to use such water. Water should not be so left, but if it should chance to be it should be thrown away. Freshly-drawn water only should always be used for culinary purposes as well as for drinking whenever practicable. Moreover, the faucets over sinks and wash basins are always more or less liable to contamination, hence the first water that flows on opening them after they have been left all night without use should always be let flow away—it is dangerous to drink and unfit for the toilet or for cooking water; even boiled disinfected germs are unwholesome.—Sanitarium.

Grilled Mackerel.

When choosing mackerel see that it has a bright, silvery appearance. A mackerel should be washed if you are going to grill it, but simply remove the gills and inside and then wipe quick dry and clean with a clean cloth. Next split it down the back, and if it is a large fish open it out flat. Sprinkle over it a little pepper and salt and a little oil, or, if you prefer it, put here and there a few small pieces of drippings. Grill it over a clear fire; see that both sides are thoroughly cooked. When it is sufficiently done the fish will come away easily from the bones. A small mackerel will probably take about ten minutes, and large ones, of course, longer. Serve very hot.—Boston Budget.

Cranberry Mince Pie.

Chop finely one cupful of cranberries and one-half cupful of stoned raisins. Place half of this mixture in a plate lined with pastry, cover with one-half cupful of sugar and one tablespoonful of flour. Spread on the rest of the fruit and another half cupful of sugar; lastly add one-half cupful of wine in which is one-half teaspoonful of vanilla and a pinch of salt. Add the upper crust and bake.—Good Housekeeping.

STAGE GOSSIP.

James A. Herne will soon produce a new war play called "The Rev. Griffith Davenport." The hero is a clergyman with strong patriotic tendencies.

London critics are wondering why Richard Mansfield does not try another season in the British capital. The latest addition to Mr. Mansfield's company is Miss Mabel Beardsley, sister of Aubrey Beardsley, the artist.

Emile Moreau, who is credited with having written the greater part of "Madame Sans Gene" for Sardou, has just completed a new play called "The Accursed Mountain," in which Jane Hading will appear at the Porte St. Martin, in Paris.

"Sweet Nancy," Mr. Buchanan's adaptation of Rhoda Droughton's London story, has been revived at a London theater with immense success. Miss Annie Hughes, an actress who some years ago charmed many American theater-goers, plays Nancy.

Arthur W. Pinero's new play, "The Princess and the Butterfly; or, the Pantheists," is shortly to be produced in London by George Alexander. The author says it is a comedy, but the statement is received doubtfully by those who remember that he described "The Benefit of the Doubt" in similar terms.

It is said that Eleonora Duse intends appearing in Shakespearean roles on her next visit to this country. Before going to the Vienna hospital, where she is at present undergoing treatment, the actress left orders with Worth for a large number of handsome gowns suited to Shakespearean productions.

"Nelson's Enchantment," the much-talked-of play now running at the Avenue theater in London, has proved dull and disappointing, although Mrs. Patrick Campbell, who takes the part of Lady Hamilton, wins praise from all the critics. Her gowns are said to be both artistic and magnificent. It is hard to imagine Forbes Robertson as Nelson, but his make-up is described as marvelous.

Wool is advancing in London and in our markets; slowly, however, because of the immense accumulations of heavy importing orders in anticipation of duties to be imposed. It is certain that the season's wool supply will be large enough to keep prices from rising materially until the glut shall be removed by mill consumption.

A COUNTERFEITER CAUGHT.

The Police of Syracuse Make an Important Capture.

On Monday the 15th Harold Marquise, of Utica, N. Y., was arrested in Syracuse, N. Y., on a warrant sworn out by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., charging him with forgery. On the 15th of December Marquise visited a photo-engraver in Syracuse, saying he was the representative of the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., and arranged for the making of a full set of plates for the direction sheets, labels, etc., of the famous Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. News of this real business transaction, and no time was lost in arranging for his arrest when he should return for the plates. He returned on the 15th, and was accordingly arrested and is now in jail in Syracuse awaiting examination, which occurs on March 23.

This arrest proves to be an important one. In addition to various plunder, such as medical books, typewriters, rugs, etc., found in Marquise's trunk when arrested, the police also found counterfeit coin in the trunk and on his person; and in a search of his apartments in Utica found a complete outfit for counterfeiting consisting of crucibles, bellows, nickel, lead, bismuth, antimony, a small blacksmith forge, a charcoal furnace, and several plaster-of-paris moulds for making coins. Marquise's want him just as soon as Dr. Williams' Medicine Co. are through with him, and, no doubt, he will be sentenced for a long period.

In selecting Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for his counterfeiting operations, he showed his knowledge of the proprietary medicine business, for these pills are much in demand and they are easily sold at any drug store in the United States. His scheme was to work the country druggists and sell his imitations at a discount of from 25 percent to 50 percent, explaining the reduced price by the fact that he had picked them up in small lots and at a discount from dealers who were overstocked. By working fast and making long jumps, he would have secured many hundreds of dollars in a short time. The proprietors of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are most fortunate to have caught the rogue, before he had fairly started, and to have thus kept these spurious goods out of the market.

CURRENT TOPICS.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF.

FIFTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

(Special Session.)

In the senate, on the 15th, President McKinley's proclamation calling the Fifty-fifth congress in extraordinary session was read, receiving the undivided attention of senators and spectators in the galleries. Most of the session, which lasted until 2:30 p. m., was spent in recess awaiting the organization of the house. In the house organization was effected by the election of Mr. Reed, of Maine, speaker by the following vote: Reed, 192; Bailey, (dem. Tex.) 114; Bell (pop. Tex.) 31 and Newlands (sil. Nev.) 1, and by the re-election of the sergeant-at-arms and other officers of the last house. Mr. Reed took the oath of office, administered by Mr. Harner (rep. Pa.), the senior member, and in turn administered the oath to all the members. The rules of the last house were adopted. After the drawing of the seats the president's message was received and read; the Dingley tariff bill was introduced; the committees on rules, ways and means and mileage were appointed, and the house, at 4 p. m., adjourned until the 16th.

In the senate, on the 16th, one pension bill was passed, and several hundred bills, public and private, were introduced and referred. Over two hours were spent in discussing the credentials of Mr. John A. Henderson, appointed by the governor of Florida to fill a vacancy. An effort to have Mr. Henderson admitted proved unsuccessful, and the matter was referred, together with like cases from Kentucky and Oregon, to the committee on privileges and elections. The senate then adjourned until the 18th.

The house was not in session on the 16th. In the senate, on the 18th, during an open session of one hour, a large number of bills that had been on the calendar or on the files in committees in the last or prior congresses were re-introduced. The bill for the adjustment of the government debts of the Pacific railroad companies was reported and placed on the calendar. A resolution was agreed to looking to the purchase of the islands of St. Croix, St. John and St. Thomas, of Delaware, was introduced and referred. In the house, the committee on ways and means not being ready to report, after the reading of the journal the house adjourned.

In the senate, on the 19th, during a short session, 187 bills were added to the 794 already introduced during the extra session. The petition of John Howard Addicks, contesting the election of Senator John C. Calhoun, of Delaware, was presented and referred. The senate went into executive session on the arbitration treaty at 12:30 p. m., and at 4 o'clock adjourned until the 22d. In the house the first representative gave indications of an unusually lively session. Mr. Dingley, chairman of the ways and means committee, reported the tariff bill, with a recommendation that it do pass, which, with the accompanying report, was placed upon the calendar. The sundry civil and general deficiency appropriation bills were passed.

LOWER RIVER FLOODS.

No Abatement in the Mad Rush of Angry Waters.

Relief Boats Doing Noble Work in the Rescue of the Drowned Out and Starving People—The Situation Hourly Growing Worse.

ST. LOUIS, March 20.—Water, water, everywhere, and not a spot of dry land left which to seek refuge, is the wail that comes out of the southland. The Cumberland and the Tennessee are pouring mighty volumes into the Ohio from the south, and the Wabash is rushing in one of the greatest floods ever known in its valley. All this makes the volume of water poured into the Mississippi from the Ohio probably greater than ever before. At the present time, a stretch of country over 100 miles long from a point 70 miles south of Memphis to 50 miles south of the Tennessee metropolis, is submerged, in places to a depth of 15 feet, as the land dips or rises.

Fertile valleys in Tennessee and Arkansas are completely inundated, many lives have been lost, stock drowned, fencing and dwellings swept away, and the inhabitants, destitute and homeless, are left to starve or drown by the steadily and remorselessly rising tide.

Late reports from nearly all tributary streams show rains and rapidly rising rivers, floods from which will soon be emptied into the Mississippi, adding to the danger when hurried against the already weakened levees, now patrolled hourly by armed and desperate men, provided with sandbags to strengthen weak places or to close threatened crevasses, and rifles to shoot down any miscreant who would venture to cut the embankment to allow the waters on his plantation to find a vent into the lowlands of a neighbor.

The floods now partake of the nature of a deluge. As far as the eye can see, nothing but water meets the gaze, until checked by lowering clouds on the horizon. And still the rain falls, the waters continue to rise, as silently and irresistibly as fate, while shivering women and wailing children on railway embankments or levees expect mentally to be swallowed up by the resistless tide as it swirls and gurgles gleefully to the gulf, carrying on its wide expanse homes of homeless ones.

The levee at Modoc landing, Ark., gave way Thursday night and the people in that vicinity fled for their lives. The government corps, who had labored hard to save the levee, were at once taken to Old Town, several miles below, with 6,000 sand bags, to protect the levee there. The men are working under the most discouraging conditions, the rain falling in torrents and undoing their work as fast as it is done.

The entire levee between Helena, Ark., which is 36 miles above Modoc landing, and Relief is reported to be doomed to destruction. North Helena is submerged, although the town proper is thought to be in no danger.

Seventeen persons were reported drowned 50 miles below Caruthersville, Mo., where the levee is said to have gone to pieces. Near Caruthersville the levee was maliciously cut and government engineers were dispatched to repair the break.

A negro woman named Etta Nix and her four children were drowned near Marion, Ark., where 400 helpless flood victims were rescued Wednesday and taken to Memphis.

The river rose three-tenths of a foot at Memphis, and as rain has fallen incessantly for 36 hours in west Tennessee and east Arkansas the rise promises to continue.

The relief boats sent out from Memphis are doing noble work. Six hundred persons were rescued yesterday on the Arkansas side of the river and taken to Memphis, but there are flood districts so situated that the relief boats can not reach the stricken ones.

On Island 39 100 sufferers and considerable live stock were rescued by the steamer Itasca. Neither man nor beast had tasted food for over 24 hours. Human beings and helpless brutes are huddled together awaiting assistance all along the Iron Mountain and Kansas City, Fort Scott & Gulf tracks.

Five hundred people were forced to flee from the floods in Dyer and Obion counties, Tennessee. The legislature of that state has been appealed to for help, as there were 3,000 destitute refugees in Memphis last night, and more arriving every hour.

A census appeared at Glendale, Miss., Thursday, a few miles below Helena, Ark. The whole delta country will suffer. The water will flood the country and return to the Mississippi through the Yazoo.

The Arkansas river rose over three feet yesterday at Fort Smith and Little Rock, and is nearing the high-water mark, as the result of three days' heavy rains.

The Cumberland river continues to rise at Nashville, Tenn., submerging the lowlands everywhere in its valley.

Paducah, Ky., is an island, the Ohio hovering about the 50 mark. All west Kentucky streams are raging torrents, devastating property far and wide.

The Tennessee river continues on a rampage in Alabama, rising two inches an hour at Florence.

From Helena, Ark., as far as Westover there is a levee which has done service since the days of 1882, the last break, which occurred March, 1889, from that day until now the government has expended some $225,000. That expenditure has been a safeguard to over 1,000,000 acres of the richest land in the world. Leaving Helena at 2:15 p. m. the levees were followed the entire distance to Modoc, which is 36 miles below Helena. Capt. E. D. Pillow, who has been fighting the mighty Father of Waters for the past 25 years, has a force of 800 men working from the box factory to Long Lake.

The levee, which has a narrow apex nearly three miles, has been guarded with a row of sacks filled with sand, which will protect the levee for that distance. He is assisted by Mr. T. H. Rice, who has for the last 15 years been a levee builder.

Throughout the Memphis territory there has been scarcely a ray of sunshine since last Sunday morning, and few and brief let-ups in the rainfall. Thursday night it rained hard and had been doing so all day. A half-inch rise on the Memphis gauge means an enormous volume of water pouring down, since it covers a surface of at least 30 miles.

The Memphis relief committee wired Gov. Jones of Arkansas, calling attention to the condition of refugees from his state, asking for state aid and also suggesting that he wire Arkansas congressmen to seek government aid. This was the governor's reply: "There are no funds at my disposal for relief of flood sufferers. I can do nothing to aid you." Upon receipt of this response the committee issued an open letter to merchants, farmers and citizens of Mississippi, Arkansas and Tennessee, asking aid in maintenance of refugees and their live stock.

Says a Memphis special: Along the river there are also hundreds of people driven from their homes, most of them taking refuge at Dyersburg and other railroad towns of this section. Most of these people saved practically few of their possessions, either household effects, live stock, and the future for them is filled with dense gloom even when the water subsides, which will be late in the planting season. They will have nothing to make a start toward their maintenance. It is not difficult to foresee the logical consequence of the condition, both to the immediate victims and communities relying upon them, either wholly or in part.

The river at Helena is 47 feet on the gauge, which is one and one-tenth feet below high water mark, while the river at Westover is six inches higher than ever known before, and at Old Town, six miles below Westover, the river is three inches above the highest water mark. At Modoc it is three inches higher than ever known before.

Floods in the Northwest. The effects of the mild weather in the northwest are beginning to be felt. Melting ice and snow has opened the Bad river in South Dakota and its violent waters are pouring into the still frozen Missouri. The Cheyenne is expected to open to-day and precipitate an awful gorge in the Missouri, which will soon break in the vicinity of Pierre. Settlers on the flats are moving their effects to higher quarters in anticipation of a disastrous flood.

The ice gorge in the Missouri at Florence, Neb., moved out, and the river rose three feet at Omaha. From all indications the spring rise of the Missouri promises to send an unprecedented volume of water into the Mississippi this year, which will play havoc should the situation on the lower river not improve soon.

The Situation Growing Worse in Iowa. ST. LOUIS, Ky., March 20.—Though many of Thursday night's rumors of drowning are unconfirmed, the actual flood situation is growing worse. The Floyd river has carried away every bridge from Lemars to a mile above Sioux City, and is still rising. The valley is full from hill to hill, the towns of Merrill, Hinton and the Sioux City suburbs of Springdale, Lynn and Leeds, flooded and many houses in Sioux City itself are surrounded by water. On the Big Sioux, many bridges are out and at Hawarden, the water is reported five feet deep in the streets. The Northwestern is said to have not a bridge left between Huron and Hawarden. The Missouri is still frozen here, but is rumored to be breaking and gorging at Onawa, same distance farther down.

Bridge Approach Washed Away. LOUISVILLE, Ky., March 20.—A dispatch from Wickliffe, Ky., says that a part of the approach to the bridge over the Ohio at East Cairo, Ky., has been washed away, delaying traffic on the Illinois Central. More damage is expected. The river is rising here with 18 feet on the falls.

THE NEW TARIFF BILL

Chairman Dingley Reports the Measure to the House.

The Report Embodies an Outline of the Deficiency in the Revenues During the Past Four Years and Points Out the Remedy.

WASHINGTON, March 19.—Mr. Dingley, of Maine, chairman of the committee on ways and means, yesterday reported the tariff bill to the house. The report accompanying the measure, which was written by Mr. Dingley, is in part as follows:

For nearly four years the revenue has been inadequate to meet the current expenditures and pay the interest on the war debt. The deficiency during this period has been as follows:

Total deficiency	$ 69,032,290	43,668,230	25,032,240	65,000,000

The total deficiency for the four years, amounting in the aggregate to more than $200,000,000 or over $50,000,000 per annum in time peace, with the official estimate of the late secretary of the treasury, in his last annual report that under existing conditions there will be a further deficiency of $45,000,000 for the fiscal year which will begin on the first day of July next, and the further fact that the government has been obliged to obtain means to pay this deficit by borrowing $200,000,000, upon which the paying interest has been justified the conviction of congress to devise a prompt and adequate remedy. The fact must not be lost sight of that while the government has during this fiscal year sold bonds of the face value of $20,315,400, from which it has realized $20,841,894 in gold, for the purpose of paying its demand notes presented for redemption, yet $20,000,000 of these notes so redeemed have been again paid to meet the deficiency and thus made available for a second redemption requiring a second and a third issue of bonds.

Thus it will be seen that in the last analysis $200,000,000 or, in round numbers, $200,000,000 of borrowed gold has been used to supply an insufficiency of revenue. And worse still, the price of the gold sold during the year (the same thing) the notes paid from the reserve to meet these continuous deficiencies of revenue, has been one of the potent causes for the distrust which has existed in business circles.

Neither does the fact that on the 1st day of March there was a cash balance in the treasury of nearly $100,000,000 after deducting the available fractional silver and minor coin change the necessity of additional revenue at the earliest possible day, for the reason that at least $100,000,000 of this will be required to meet the deficiency between March 1st and July 1st of the current fiscal year, leaving only $100,000,000 in the cash balance, on July 1st next, of which $100,000,000 is gold that ought to remain in the reserve and not be used to pay current expenses. This would leave only $80,000,000 as the treasury working balance next July, which is as small as safety permits.

The customs revenue under the act of 1890 for the first full fiscal year of its operation was $177,000,000, and for the second fiscal year (1893) was $203,000,000, with raw sugar on the free list. In October, 1892, before it was known that radical reductions of duties were to be made, the then secretary of the treasury estimated that the customs revenue for the fiscal year 1894 would be $220,000,000, on the basis of the gradually increasing receipts up to that time. But in January, 1893, he informed the committee on ways and means that the anticipation of a new tariff with lower duties would inevitably postpone importations, diminish the customs revenue by anticipation, as well as injuriously affect business. Thus, notwithstanding the tariff of 1890 remained on the statute book during the fiscal year 1894, yet the actual receipts during the year a lower tariff was expected several months before it was finally enacted, united with the arrest of industries and consequent reduction of the consuming power of our people, caused a postponement or abandonment of importations to a large extent and thus practically nullified the tariff of 1890 before its actual repeal.

The customs revenue for the fiscal year 1893, ten months in which the tariff of 1890 was in operation, was $182,000,000 by deferred importations and the restoration of the duty on sugar, and in the fiscal year 1894 to $100,000,000, of which receipts of duties were to be made, the then secretary of the treasury estimated that the customs revenue for the fiscal year 1894 would be $220,000,000, on the basis of the gradually increasing receipts up to that time. THE CHRONICLE

C. C. DUBOSE, Proprietor.
COLUMBIANA, MAR. 25, 1897.

The L. & N. railroad has decided, and is now taking steps to have some of the resources along its road represented at the exposition at Nashville.

A cyclone struck a school house near Arlington, Ga., Monday morning, killing eight of the scholars and wounding fifteen. Only six escaped with out injury.

The contest between Plowman and Aldrich is at last at an end and resulted in Plowman being seated. Aldrich has likely finished his career as a congressman.

A fearful wreck occurred on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad near Oakland Ind., Saturday, in which Gen. J. S. Fullerton, a St. Louis capitalist, was buried under the ruins of a Pullman car.

Now that Mr. Cleveland is out of office and retired to private life would it not be infinitely better for the papers to cease abusing him and endeavor to do more for the upbuilding of their communities.

Calhoun county is making fine progress toward making her fair at Oxford a great success. The people are being urged to do all in their power toward assisting it and as the citizens of this county rarely fail in any undertaking it will be a success.

Colbert county has voted another $100,000 appropriation to be devoted to the improvement of the public roads. Why cannot Shelby county get out of the old rut and endeavor by some means to do likewise? There is nothing that speaks so much for a county or that assists more in the promotion of every branch of industry than do good roads.

It is said that a meteor, forty feet in diameter, burst over a little town in Ohio Tuesday morning, knocked a man senseless, killed one horse, rendered one deaf, knocked three holes in the side of a barn and scared the women and children. The reason why it did not knock down more men was because all the others were in Washington hunting pie.—Selma Times.

The news received from along the river courses is becoming more appalling every day. Especially is the Mississippi river doing incalculable damage; Levers are breaking all along its course and the loss of lives, to say nothing of the damage to property, is simply awful. People are fleeing for safer quarters as rapidly as possible but many fail to escape. Railroads are becoming blocked, steamboat navigation is completely checked and there is no reckoning the amount of loss being suffered. This is almost as severe a punishment to those people as will be suffered by the people at large for having again allowed the control of the government to get into the hands of the republicans.

The New York Times says: "Mr. Dingley's tariff bill has a defective and dishonest title. It is described as 'A bill to provide revenue for the government and to encourage the industries of the United States.' If the authors of the bill had been willing to reveal their secret purposes and its actual effects, it would have been entitled: 'A bill to prohibit the importation of foreign merchandise; to diminish the exportation of American merchandise; to enrich protected trusts and combinations of American manufacturers; to deliver into their hands the unprotected American consumer; to fool the farmer, as usual, and to provide revenue for the government as at present wastefully and extravagantly administered.'"

There is a great deal of excitement about Sylacauga over the alleged forgeries of T. H. Bass, of that place, who, it is about to be proved, forged the name of several prominent men in Sylacauga and Talladega to papers on which he obtained about $15,000. Many of the friends of Mr. Bass are slow to believe this report as he was heretofore a man of good reputation. He had figured largely in politics, having had the honor of representing his county in several state conventions in which he proved himself as a man of great capacity. He was once a country editor which was also strong proof that he is immaculate. But, notwithstanding all this, it is undoubtedly true that he is guilty, the strongest proof of which being his sudden departure to parts unknown.

The tendency of the day points surely to the fact that women are rapidly becoming involved in politics. They seek to overcome the argument that its roughness is not suited to their sensitive natures by reasoning that when they enter the field their gentleness and refinement will mitigate to a large extent the roughness of men. In this we fear they will be sadly mistaken, for when we look at the instances where this has been tried we find that it proved a miserable failure. Having nothing to fear at the hands of men they are entirely unrestrained and prove even worse than men. It is a fearful condescension on the part of woman to step from the throne which she occupies in the eyes of man to grovel in the low, degraded pursuits of life and we shall ever do all in our power to dissuade her.

GIVE US A REST.

From the Mobile Herald.
The country needs a rest on the financial question. Not five months have yet passed since the close of the presidential campaign; since the time when the papers teemed with arguments in favor of the gold standard and of free silver, and the welkin rang with the eloquence of orators who did not know what they were talking about, and the shouts of multitudes who had only a vague idea of what they were shouting about. The people were tired out when the campaign closed and have not yet had time to get rested.

Why attempt to start the agitation again now, when we are more than three years distant from another presidential campaign? Why should Mr. Tynnum undertake a missionary tour through the country in the interest of sound money? We believe in sound money, and do not believe in unlimited free silver coinage, but we can see no good to be accomplished now by reviving the discussion of the matter. Enough of a thing is enough. The financial policy of the government has been settled for the next four years. Whatever changes are necessary in our monetary system is a matter for congressional legislation.

Neither do we see any propriety in the conference of silver men recently held in Denver, Col. The session was a secret one, and the members of the conference refused positively to say what was done. It is known, however, that the meeting was largely for the purpose of talking over and deciding upon the ways and means of continuing the silver campaign. Senator Jones made an address in which he advocated the distribution of large quantities of silver literature, that being, in his opinion, the best way to educate the people on the subject.

To this way heaven forbid! From such a flood of silver literature may kind Providence defend us. Senator Jones and other declinarians of his school of politics ought to know that the people are not at all anxious for any further education on the subject of finance at present. Senator Jones and his associates think of nothing but the silver question. The public thinks of many other things, and is not disposed to drop everything else and spend the balance of existence worrying over the various problems presented to it during the recent presidential campaign.

SOUTH AND THE TARIFF BILL.

From the Savannah News.
When the republicans began framing the tariff bill they said the South would be taken care of. But how is the South treated? Can any fair-minded man say she is treated fairly? As a matter of fact she is treated outrageously.

Yes, a reasonable duty is put on rice, but rice production interests only a small fraction of the southern people. The duty on sugar is increased, but it was not increased in order to afford sugar planters more protection. It was increased to get additional revenue, and it is about the only thing that will yield much additional revenue.

The South asked for a protection on Egyptian cotton in order to protect growers of Sea Island cotton, and the ways and means committee refused the request. And why did the committee refuse it? Because a few manufacturers at the North use Egyptian cotton. The committee preferred to favor a few manufacturers rather than thousands of southern farmers.

But not only did it refuse to give any protection to the farmers who grow sea island cotton, but it placed a heavy burden on all farmers who raise cotton, whether sea island or upland, but chiefly upon those who raise upland. It put a protective duty on cotton ties and bagging.

The Wilson tariff released the cotton farmers from the grasp of those grasping corporations, the manufacturers of cotton ties and bagging, but the ways and means committee has undertaken to make them again pay tribute to those trusts.

We do not know whether or not congress will approve this action of the ways and means committee, but we should not be surprised if it did. The cotton tie and bagging manufacturers have got along very well without any protective duty, and they have held the market. Why then should the cotton farmers be taxed to increase their profits? The price of cotton is low, and the cotton farmers cannot well stand this additional tax with which the republican party proposes to burden them.

In the tariff bill the North appears to be dealt with generously, but the South is dealt with as if the republican party had a grudge against her.

A Comparison.

From the Philadelphia Times.
Cleveland's first administration turned over to the Harrison administration, beside the hundred million gold reserve, a net available balance, deducting redemption fund, subsidiary coin, etc., of $48,096,148.

The Harrison administration turned over to the second Cleveland administration a nominal balance of $24,128,088, but if the books had been kept in the same way as four years before they would have shown an actual deficit of $9,641,893, the gold reserve being impaired to that extent.

The retiring administration turns over to the new a net available balance, over and above the hundred million gold reserve, of $72,350,916, making the same deduction as before.

Mr. Gage has a very much less difficult situation to meet than confronted Mr. Carlisle, to whom he has good reason for gratitude.

THE SOUTHERN RAILWAY'S EXHIBIT AT THE TENNESSEE CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Arrangements have been perfected by which the Southern Railway's territory will be represented at the exposition which opens at Nashville on May 1. This, like former exhibits made by that company, will include sample specimens of mineral, agricultural, forest and other products of the states of Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, East Tennessee and Kentucky. This company's exhibit at the Atlanta and Pittsburg Expositions attracted the attention of the agriculturist, manufacturer, miner, stock-raiser and others, and did more to educate the visitors to an appreciation of the great wealth and possibilities of the South than any other one exhibit that was shown, and it is the policy of the company to actively continue this method of advertising. The scenic beauties of the country through which the Southern Railway runs will not be neglected in this exhibit.

Practically, this exhibit will be a bureau of information, so that visitors from the North and abroad can obtain specific data relative to all branches of industry in and tributary to the vast number of points on the Southern Railway.

This exhibit is under the direction of the Land and Industrial Department of the Southern Railway with headquarters at Washington, D. C., and persons located along that system having exhibit material that they think will interest the public and thereby help advance the best interest of the section from which it comes, should at once communicate with the agent of that department.

This is an exhibit in which every citizen of this section should be interested, and we hope that some of our readers can supply something to represent our territory.

Alabama's Improvements.

From the Montgomery Advertiser.
The Boston Globe congratulates Massachusetts upon the new complete equipment and satisfactory provisions for the agricultural and mechanical college of that state. Alabama stands in the front rank in the matter of institutions of this sort. The one at Auburn has a national reputation and has grown into immense favor at home as its roll bears the names of a larger number of students than have ever attended an Alabama institution. The facilities for teaching are there, although improvements in every department are made every year. The institution for girls, now called The Alabama Polytechnic for Girls, was a success from the day the doors were opened last November. It is growing much more rapidly than its staunchest friends dreamed of and is now where it was hoped it would be after three or four years trial. All its aiders and promoters deserve the lasting gratitude of the people of this state. They builded wisely and great is the benefit to be reaped by the rising generation.

In a recent examination some boys were asked to define certain words and to give a sentence illustrating the meaning. Here are a few: Frantic is wild; I picked some frantic flowers. Athletic, strong; the vinegar was too athletic to use. Tandem, one behind another; the boys sit tandem at school. And then some single words are fancifully explained. Dust is mud with the wet squeezed out. Fins are fishes' wings. Stars are the moon's eggs. Circumference is the distance around the middle of the outside.—Educational Gazette.

I desire to attest to the merits of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy as one of the most valuable and efficient preparations on the market. It broke an exceedingly dangerous cough for me in 24 hours, and in gratitude therefor, I desire to inform you that I will never be without it and you should feel proud of the high esteem in which your remedies are held by people in general. It is the one remedy among ten thousand. Success to it.—O. R. Downey, Editor Democrat, Albion, Ind. For sale by J. E. Seale & Co., Druggists.

"Do you think opals are unlucky?" inquired the superstitious man. "Yes," was the reply. "My wife wants one and it's going to cost me $50."—Washington Star.

On the morning of Feb. 20, 1895, I was sick with rheumatism, and lay in bed until May 21st, when I got a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. The first application of it relieved me almost entirely from the pain and the second afforded complete relief. In a short time I was able to be up and about again.—A. T. Moreau, Levee, Minn. Sold by J. E. Seale & Co., Druggists.

A little boy in Georgia who wrote to Santa Claus for a pony was wise enough to add: "Pleeeeee if he is a mule, please let his behind leg go."

Wilsonville Warblings.

The river is still rising.
W. S. Butler, of Selma, visited relatives here last week.
Chas. Adkins, of Calera, visited relatives here Monday.

Miss Lyde Wilson returned to her home in Birmingham Monday.

Messrs. Kyle and Jackson visited friends and relatives (?) in the country near Jackson's saw mill Sunday.

I. D. Montgomery went to Columbiana last week.

Amos Daniels, in company with a colored gentleman, visited the county jail Monday.

Miss Rosa Graham, who is attending school in Columbiana, visited relatives here Sunday.

J. H. Robertson, of Columbiana, was in town Saturday.

Look out, girls, rig up in your Sunday duds, keep a sweet smile playing around your rosy lips all the while and be prepared at any moment to take a drive over the country—Nat Nivens has purchased a new buggy.

Some time since one of our merchants ordered a car of guano from parties in Montgomery. Not receiving the goods promptly a tracer was started out which ran the car down in Chicago. It is supposed the billing clerk in Montgomery made the error.

Conductor Land, of the Southern railway, met with a serious accident Saturday. While climbing over the top of his train he was struck by the iron bridge which spans Yellow Leaf creek just north of town, which resulted in a very painful wound. A gash was cut about five inches across his head. Dr. Edwards was called to dress the wound, and stated that there was probably some pressure on the brain which rendered him insensible.

The young men of our town have formed themselves into a band, known as the "Young Men's Christian Union." We cordially invite every young man and boy to be present at the meetings on Tuesday evenings and lend their influence to make it a success.

A young negro man purloined a suit of clothes from the store of R. G. Weldon & Co., last Saturday and was given six months hard labor for the county by Squire Gwin.

Quite a romantic wedding took place in our town sometime since. Those who were present at the last meeting of the literary society probably remember the graphic description of same given by Editor J. M. Kyle, of the "Wilsonville Dispatch."

"Jake" and the Vincent correspondents will no doubt arrange to meet at Carson City at an early date. Two to one on Jake." PAT.

Sterrett Stirrings.

After a few days of pretty weather, rain in abundance is again upon us, retarding the further progress of our farmers.

Messrs. A. B. Turner and J. W. Holcombe carried a lot of beef cattle to the Magic City last week.

Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Falkner left for Birmingham Sunday where they have gone to have Mrs. Falkner's eyes treated. We earnestly hope she may soon have her eyes to their full use.

Calvin Falkner is visiting relatives at Leeds.

Our school, under the tutelage of Miss Sallie Donaldson, is progressing finely.

Postmaster L. H. Dyke, has been quite sick for sometime.

Miss Annie Falkner, who has been visiting her brother J. J. Falkner, returned to her home in Pleasant Valley last Friday.

Several of our citizens have been summoned to attend this term of the Circuit court.

Albert Falkner, of Pleasant Valley, visited his sister, Mrs. James Goodwin, Saturday and Sunday.

Messrs. R. E. Casper and W. H. Falkner paid Vandiver a business trip Saturday and report that Messrs. A. C. Wilder and J. P. Kinnett, of the firm of Adams, Wilder & Co., are doing a thriving business.

Our venerable friend Johnathan Raugh, one of Sterrett's oldest citizens, has, we are sorry to say, been quite feeble for sometime.

Mrs. Whitfield, daughter of Isaac Howard, of near Dyke's Mill, after a protracted illness, died Sunday and was interred at the Lawley graveyard Monday.

Tramps, drummers and rain continue to come; taken altogether what a muddy time we have; then add on the back action tax and high tariff oil laws we will still have muddier times.

Horse-swapping has been in order the past few days, and by the way, if you want to make a good swap go to Vandiver. One of Sterrett's horse-swappers, knowing this, went up last Saturday and gave a good horse for five bushels of corn and a white mule-bitch with a pair of large ears to it—see?

Mr. Editor: It would appear that our charming photographer is about to catch the supposed Advocate correspondent at this place, signed "Quaker."

Quite a number of Sterrett's young people embraced the opportunity of the beautiful weather Saturday afternoon, and with great joy and many anticipations ascended the lofty peaks of "Potato Hill" mountain to its summit near here. Photographer Falkner, went along with his camera and took several views of the rocky cliffs and with the company of young people arranged in front of same. Being anxious to be in the group of pictures near by the side of his best girl, Mr.

P—set the machine and had Percy Goodwin make the exposure of the plate after he had placed himself near his "ideal." It will not be saying too much to say that the plan was a grand success. DIXIE.

From Lewis and Four Mile.

Spring is here at last and we are having some pretty weather.

Davis Riddle is very sick at this writing, but we hope he will soon recover.

Miss Myrtle Jackson, of Four Mile, is visiting her friend, Miss Kyle, at Jackson's Mill.

We have had so much rain of late our farmers are complaining of being very badly behind with their work. But from the present indications we are going to have suitable weather for the plow.

Our young people are all taking a great interest in singing. And we congratulate them on this important step and hope they will soon be able to furnish the church and all societies with good music. They met Saturday night at the residence of D. G. Baker and informed us that it was their intention to meet at McGowan's school house next Sunday, March 28th inst. Let all who feel interested in this grand work attend.

We certainly feel pleased to admit "Ego," of Vincent, into our band of cousins. And I, too, have wondered why such a town as Vincent did not have a correspondent to The Chronicle. I would also be glad to hear from "Jake," of Harpersville, again before next year.

Rev. S. J. Parrish filled his regular appointment at Blue Springs Sunday.

Prof. S. S. Crumpton's school will close next Friday with an examination on Thursday and Friday. Let all attend and see if the children are improved in their studies. Prof. Crumpton is a hustler in the school room, and we are all glad to have him as our teacher.

Little Weaver McEwen, son of John McEwen, had the misfortune to get his hand severely cut Thursday. Three fingers were cut off and another one nearly so. It was done by another boy in play.

Messrs. H. E. Archer and Phillips, of Yellow Leaf, were on Four Mile Sunday.

J. H. Mason, of The Advocate, was the guest of his son-in-law, George Powell Sunday.

G. D. Jackson, of near Wilsonville, spent Sunday on Four Mile with home folks.

Messrs. Will McEwen and Byron Lindsey, of near Wilsonville, were on Four Mile Sunday with their best girls.

ONE OF WE.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dinendale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitancy in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church, at Rives' Junction, she was brought down with Puerperal pneumonia succeeding La Grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption, and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free at Parker & Armstrong's drug store. Regular size 50c and $1.00.

A Kansas woman who carried on a long range courtship with a St. Louis man, who advertised for a wife, brought him to the point of agreeing to marry her, but when she went to St. Louis and he saw her he backed out. She doesn't look on that as a square transaction and insists on several thousand dollars damages. When a lawyer visited the accused and said the lady's relatives wanted to know why he had backed out of the yoke, he said: "Just tell them that I saw her."—Selma Times.

It is, or should be, the highest aim of every merchant to please his customers; and that the wide-awake drug firm of Meyers & Eschleman, Sterling, Ill., is doing so, is proven by the following, from Mr. Eschleman: "In my sixteen years' experience in the drug business I have never seen or sold or tried a medicine that gave as good satisfaction as Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy." Sold by J. E. Seale & Co., Druggists.

Bacon—When he was courting her, he promised to throw everything at her feet.

Egbert—And did she reciprocate? Bacon—Well, I should rather say she did! After they were married she threw everything at his head!—Yonkers Statesman.

On last Friday morning we had a severe wind storm which bore a strong resemblance to a cyclone. It was seen for some minutes before reaching town and to all appearances looked exactly like one. A vast white cloud of wind and rain extending many feet in the air was seen approaching with a fearful roar, tearing down many fences and trees in its course; the approach being so sudden that none had time to seek a pit for refuge and some were frightened almost to death. The damage was quite extensive about town to fences and old houses, but nothing serious resulted. It is reported that on a farm about three miles east of town several hundred trees were laid flat upon the ground. We are truly thankful "things are not always what they seem" for when we saw this storm approaching we came to the conclusion that Columbianna might get over it but it would never look like anything.

The sacred concert given by Dr. Woody and his chorus class on Monday evening was a grand success. The doctor has a perfect right to feel proud of this class as they not only did themselves great credit but by their mastery way of handling music, which they had never before seen, reflected great credit upon their teacher and proves that he not only understands music theoretically but has the ability of making it very practical. This is grand work in which he is engaged and we hope the people will show their appreciation by securing for him a class of fifty that he may return and instruct them more thoroughly.

On March 26th and 27th you are cordially invited to attend the opening of Mrs. Willie White & Co., at the store of Johnston & White. They have a beautiful selection of ladies hats of all descriptions, trimmings, veils and in fact all things you may need in the millinery line. If you want something real pretty, unique and the latest style headwear for Easter do not fail to call and examine their stock before making your selection. They will exhibit a beautiful line of pattern hats of the very latest Parisian styles. Remember the dates, Friday and Saturday, March 26th and 27th.

On last Friday Mildred White and Lizzie Walls, while playing together with an air gun, came near having a serious accident. Lizzie unintentionally fired the gun when Mildred was standing directly in front of same, the ball striking her and almost burying itself just above her eye, which had it struck, would have put out completely. We are glad to state she was not hurt much, but hope this will be a warning to children to be more careful with these guns as they are capable of doing great damage.

On last Saturday Sam Rhodes while fishing had the misfortune of getting his fish hook fastened so firmly in his finger that it could only be removed by an operation, which, though, not serious, was so fearfully painful that his physician was compelled to put him under the influence of chloroform. It was at first feared he would lose his finger but we learn that he is improving rapidly and nothing serious is anticipated.

It has been agreed among the churches of our place that the Baptist, which in the past have held services on the second Sunday, shall now have the fourth, and the Methodist the second and third. This is a good change as it will assure us services every Sunday. In the past the fourth had to be supplied and frequently resulted in there being no service.

J. H. Page is certainly ahead of the time in the growing of Irish potatoes. Last week he showed us several nearly as large as a hen egg. The rainy season having retarded the planting of vegetables so long, by the time that most of the people get their potatoes in the ground he will have them large enough for the table.

Elsewhere in this issue appears the advertisement of Dr. G. W. Shackelford, who expects to spend a few days here soon. As will be remembered he spent several weeks here last spring and did splendid work for all who patronized him. Note carefully his prices which will last only one week.

We learn on good authority, that a young gentleman, of Shelby, is trying to pose as a premier and is desirous of playing the part of Lord Bowlinggame, or else wishes to practice at a Bowling Alley. Now, young friend, beware, or there will be another glove contest.

The Wild West show, encouraged by a good crowd on last Saturday night and by the beginning of court Monday, decided to remain here three days longer. They have given first class entertainments and their gifts were both handsome and useful.

How are your eyes? Call on Dr. Brown and have them examined free. Dr. Brown is endorsed by the medical profession and cannot be classed with traveling opticians. Office at Johnston & White's.

Henry Milner keeps a complete stock and a good quality of dry goods, notions, hardware, shoes and heavy groceries that he will sell cheap for cash.

Messrs. W. S. Cary, E. S. Lyman, J. M. Harris and S. J. Perry, all of Montevallo, were among the many attending Circuit court here this week.

The wind on last Friday completely demolished the tent of the Wild West show, not only blowing it down but tearing it all to pieces.

Harpersville Echoes.

Mumps are in our community. M. W. Borum is attending court. The fruit crop is very promising. Spring with its bright flowers and singing birds has surely come. Did you just hear the bucket fall in the well at Vincent last week? The Methodist negroes are building them a parsonage at their church one mile north of town.

Rev. Mr. Crumpton, a theologian of the Howard, filled Mr. Gile's appointment at the Baptist church Saturday and Sunday last and preached a very interesting sermon on both occasions. Tom Davis's well went dry early last fall for the first time in 20 years and hasn't any water in it yet. This is something very remarkable, but you can bet your old socks that Tom don't blame Mr. Cleveland with it.

Jim Masters and wife went visiting a few nights ago, and when they came back all of their meat was gone. A search warrant was taken out and the meat was found at Warren Parker's, colored. But Warren left at a bicycle gait and if he has kept going he has seen President McKinley before now.

Pretty good rail splitting for the Four Mile professors; but say, "We Two," did my friend Spearman have that stove pipe hat on while he was splitting those rails?

A great many of our farmers are buying their corn now to make a crop with. Now, brother farmers, will you still pursue the same old plan of making cotton to buy corn with. Why not cut the cotton crop down at least one third; raise more corn, more wheat, more oats, sorghum and meat. Keep better stock and I honestly believe that a better day will then come for the farmer, and not before.

Miss Mattie Worham, a charming young lady of Irondale, is visiting Major Wallace's family.

There were quite a number of Vincent people attended church here Sunday.

J. F. Pope and wife, of Wilsonville, were among the many who attended preaching at the Baptist church last Sabbath.

We spent a few pleasant moments at our neighboring and booming town Vincent last Saturday and were truly sorry to find the people so torn up on the incorporation law. They have out two tickets now for officers to be voted for on the 5th of April. Both tickets have some of their best men on them. One ticket is known as the "town ticket" headed with that clever fellow, B. H. Samuel, for mayor, and the other ticket known as the "outsiders" with Thomas Bell for mayor, a young man who carries an empty sleeve. Either one of these gentlemen would make a good officer, both democrats. The outsiders claim they were ignored all together in getting up the law, and that a few of the town crowd got up the petition and had the town incorporated without consulting them in any way, and that they are tired of being ruled. The town is about equally divided and most all of the outsiders will vote the Bell ticket and as a consequence it will be elected, without a doubt, unless a change of some sort takes place between now and election day. Such "muddles" indeed are to be deplored, but the time has come when just a few men can't dictate for a great many, but all must be heard.

The young people of Centre Institute organized a literary society with a good number. We hope they will be able to carry out what they have undertaken. They will meet again next Saturday night and invite all to come that will.

There has been more stealing in this community since October last than has ever been known before, and we hope the guilty parties will be caught and punished as they deserve.

Four unknown men passed through this country a few days ago and from all accounts we believe them to be the men that robbed the train near Calera a few days ago.

UNCLE SAM.

A man stands no chance of being elected to the mayorship of a city unless he enjoys the confidence and esteem of his neighbors. Geo. W. Humphrey is the popular mayor of Swanton, Ohio, and under date of Jan. 17, 1896, he writes as follows: "This is to certify to our appreciation of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. My family and neighbors have tested it, and we know it is an excellent remedy for coughs and colds."—George W. Humphrey." Said by J. E. Seale & Co., Druggists.

Electric Bitters.

Electric Bitters is a medicine suited for any season, but perhaps more generally needed, when the languid exhausted feeling prevails, when the liver is torpid and sluggish and the need of a tonic and alterative is felt. A prompt use of this medicine has often averted long and protracted fatal bilious fevers. No medicine will act more surely in counteracting and relieving the system from the malarial poison, headache, indigestion, constipation, dizziness and Electric Bitters. 50c and $1.00 per bottle at Parker & Armstrong's Drug Store.

Dyspepsia Specialist (irritably)—But, madam, you must chew your food. What were your teeth given you for.

Female Patient (calmly)—They weren't given to me. I bought 'em.—London Fun.

BARGAINS!

That small word may mean a great deal or it may mean nothing, but with a reputable house of our standing it means all that it implies. Listen: we have a lot of Ladies and Misses shoes sizes 3 to 3½ which we are determined to sell. A lot that cost us in market $2.20 we will sell now for $1.50. Cheaper grades just as low in proportion to cost. This is no fake.

COFFINS & CASKETS.

Just arrived a complete line of coffins and caskets which range in size from 3 feet to 6 feet 3 inches. Also men's shrouds, any size. Complete line of coffin trimmings. Prices on these goods as low as the lowest.

STRAW HATS.

In a few days we shall display an elegant line of men's and boys' straw hats, latest styles. Rest assured the prices will be right, and that means dirt cheap. We invite inspection of our goods and comparison of prices. We ask no more. We sell all our goods on their merits. Shoddy stuff we haven't time to fool with.

Yours for business,

Are numerous, but of the latter none is more ridiculous than the promiscuous and random use of laxative pills and other drastic cathartics. These wrench, convulse and weaken both the stomach and the bowels. If Hostetter's Stomach Bitters be used instead of these no-remedies, the result is accomplished without pain and with great benefit to the bowels, the stomach and the liver. Use this remedy when constipation manifests itself, and thereby prevent it from becoming chronic.

Some people are so mean that they make their politeness disagreeable.

The report that the inauguration of a new sleeping car line from Chicago to Washington, by way of Cincinnati and Indianapolis, by the B. & O. and connecting lines, was part of a plan of the Receivers to abrogate the lease of the Central Ohio Railroad is untrue. The lease of the Central Ohio is to run for 30 years yet, and the road is too valuable as a part of the B. & O. system to be disposed of. The financial troubles, which are now in the courts, will be settled satisfactorily.

GOSSIP OF WASHINGTON.

Aquatic Poachers Kill Fish with Stolen Dynamite.

The Treatment of Persons Having Private Claims Against Uncle Sam Reflects No Credit on Congress.

[Special Washington Letter.]
There is enough dynamite stored within a stone's throw of Georgetown to blow up half a dozen cities. This dangerous explosive is used in the blasting operations at the stone quarries which line the Virginia shore of the Potomac from near the Aqueduct bridge; and also for blasting into the solid masses of rock which form the site of the new union depot. The residents of the quiet west end are being treated to a series of detonating reports, much like the discharge of heavy artillery.

The dynamite used in the operations is stored in a number of squat, one-story frame structures, which dot the picturesque shore below the precipitous

FISHING WITH DYNAMITE.

Potomac palisades. These little buildings, like whitened sentinels, mark the location of the several quarry plants. They each contain from a few sticks to a ton of dynamite, enough, in the aggregate, should it explode, to disfigure the upper Potomac, and deluge Georgetown with masses of rock and debris. For blasting purposes, however, only a few tonnes of dynamite are used at a time.

From these wooden magazines along the shores, wherein the awful explosives are stored, certain fishermen, who cannot under the law employ gill nets, have been stealing sticks of dynamite and fuses, and nearly every night they go out into the stream, and explode the stuff under the surface of the water, thus killing vast numbers of fish by concussion. The sticks are weighted, a lighted water-proof fuse applied, and they are sunk. The fishermen quickly row away from the spot. In a few moments there is a suppressed sound, like distant thunder, and a great billow of foaming water rises above the surface.

Then the aquatic poachers return to the center of the river and gather in the dead and dying fish, which float to the surface in large numbers.

"I have heard the yarp of the fellow who stole thunder and grabbed at lightning," said a Georgetown policeman, "but these fishermen who steal dynamite will compare with him in point of nerve." Commodore Sutton with the police steamer "Joe Blackburn" has been vainly trying to catch the fishermen who are depopulating the waters of the upper river of their game fish by means of stolen dynamite.

The men who work about dynamite houses are cautioned to use great care in handling the treacherous stuff. Several fatal explosions have already occurred, and a deep hole in the earth opposite the island called "Three Sisters" marks the spot where one of the superintendents of blasting lost his life last year. He was warming "chilled" dynamite at a bonfire, when a stick of the giant explosive ignited, blowing him skyward and lacerating him in a horrible manner.

The men engaged in blasting at the site of the Union depot in Georgetown are only allowed to bring dynamite from the Virginia side sufficient for one day's work. This is temporarily stored, until used, in the old Key mansion, on Al street, near the Aqueduct bridge, the house formerly occupied by Francis Scott Key, author of the "Star Spangled Banner." They used to have liberty to bring as much dynamite over to the Georgetown side of the river as the contractors desired. But not long ago there was a runaway team in Georgetown which scared all of the people almost out of their wits. The wagon was loaded with dynamite. The street was paved with cobblestones. The horses ran furiously and it seemed miraculous that no explosion occurred. The driver jumped from the wagon and was badly hurt, but he was glad to get away from his dangerous load. The horses ran fully half a mile and stopped of their own volition on the Aqueduct bridge. As they ran around the angle from the street to the bridge the wagon bumped against the iron railing. An explosion at that point would have wrecked the bridge and killed many people.

There has probably never been a session of congress that has given greater emphasis to the assertion that it is impossible to collect even a just claim against the government than the one now approaching a close. A few pension bills have been smuggled through at odd times, and an extremely limited number of relief measures, each carrying a small sum of money, have been pushed along under protest, but all of those claims which might perceptibly increase the total appropriations for this congress have been persistently relegated to the rear.

To such an extent has this policy of ignoring the obligations of the government been carried that judgments of the court of claims are no longer paid. That judicial adjunct of the government was created for the express purpose of ascertaining the merits of certain claims and to report to congress whether they should be paid or repudiated. But the policy of the managers of the house has been to minimize appropriations and make everything subservient to a record for economy. As a consequence those who are unfortunate enough to be creditors of the United States must either abandon their just claims or expect to begin a period of lobbying and waiting which may continue indefinitely.

Some congressmen have persistently called attention to the delinquency of the government, but the rank and file have been whipped into a blind and unquestioning following of leadership which shows to all claimants the futility of hoping for relief from congress.

On the day when the private calendar was taken up for consideration, Mr. Walker, of Massachusetts, declared that a certain obnoxious bill for the promotion and retirement of a hospital steward as a second lieutenant of cavalry had been placed at the head of the calendar to prevent the consideration of meritorious bills. He said:

"This case is put here under the peculiar circumstances which exist in order that justice shall not be done to men who are robbed of their just claims by the government of the United States—their just claims have been reported favorably and unanimously by the committee to whom this duty is assigned. This bill was put here to be kept here, and to be discussed the day out, so that women may still continue to haunt the halls of congress in the hope that it will deal justly with their fathers' and husbands' private claims to money honestly due them. It is an outrage and a disgrace to this house and the leaders to put in such claims as this, to be discussed all day, so that these other claims shall not be considered."

Referring to Mr. Walker's remarks, Mr. Talbert, of South Carolina, said: "I am glad to see a revival going on among gentlemen on the other side of the house. I am glad to see that the scales have been stricken from their eyes, and that they have begun to see the outrages that are being perpetrated upon the taxpayers of this country."

Mr. Mahon, of Pennsylvania, said: "I want to say this about the court of claims: That this court holds claimants to a stricter accountability, a stricter compliance with the rule of evidence than any other court in the United States. I say, either you ought to stand by the court and pay the judgments which it renders, or should abolish your court. My experience is that the greatest robber in this country is the nation itself. Our government is continually robbing private citizens of their property and refusing to reimburse them. Now, I say that the time has come for this congress either to pay those findings of the court of claims or to abolish that court and let the people of this country know that congress does not propose to pay their claims whether they are found to be just or not."

"These bills that we now have in the committee on war claims, those findings of the court of claims and other claims, are about 1,200 in number. They do not accumulate. They come in congress after congress. The bills are printed, and the reports are printed, and if you go and investigate you will find that you have spent about $340,000 in this congress for printing for this and other committees. The congressional printing bills are enormous, and usually inexcusable."

Mr. McCall, of Tennessee, said: "Will this congress repudiate the obligations that this government owes to the union men in the south? These claimants are growing old and feeble. They are fast falling into the grave. For 30 years they have expected the government to pay these long expected claims; and I now ask this congress to pay its loyal citizens their just dues as the government requires each citizen to pay to it that which he owes."

And thus the discussion continued until the hour of adjournment, without a vote having been taken on a single bill. The dear people have no idea of the conditions existing in the senate and house of representatives, whereby the do-nothing policy is constantly promoted. As a matter of fact it may be truthfully said that a large majority of the statesmen who are honored by the people care for little other than their own advancement and aggrandizement; and they legislate from purely or impurely selfish motives in all cases. This is the naked truth, although it may not be palatable to the statesmen concerning whom it is told.

RHEUMATISM AND GENERAL DEBILITY.

From the New Era, Greensburg, Ind.
Mrs. Henry Neiman lives at Sunman, Ind., and a very cozy home she has, too. A report recently called on her and found her looking stout and well, showing no indications that she had ever experienced a day's illness in her life. But her story, as related to the reporter, proved quite different.

"About two years ago," said Mrs. Neiman, "I was taken ill with sciatic rheumatism, general debility and female weakness. My trouble soon told on my entire system. My cheeks became thin and pale, all energy left me, and I fell off rapidly in flesh. Then it was that the rheumatism troubled me in my lower limbs. One attack after another came on, growing worse each time, till I could not walk at all. Of each time, till I could not walk at all. Of course I could do no work while in this condition, which made life truly a burden to me. My appetite failed me and many a night was spent in sleeplessness. Various remedies I tried all without avail, when I was advised by a friend to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, the medicine having done them such a great good in similar troubles. I bought a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and before I had taken it all I began to ease. I continued to take them, buying a second box, and when it was nearly gone I was able to get about as well as ever, and have not been troubled since."

"The medicine seems to have done much good in this locality, as many of my neighbors are cured of it in a similar way, myself. I can heartily endorse Dr. Williams' Pink Pills feeling confident that anyone afflicted as I was could easily be restored to their usual health by taking them."

To substantiate her story Mrs. Neiman gave oath as to its truth, the following being the seal of a Notary Public:

COUNTY OF INDIANA, ss.
I, J. W. RIGNEY, Notary Public,

Sworn and subscribed to before me, a Notary Public, in and for Ripley County in the state of Indiana, that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the statement of Mrs. Henry Neiman, as given to me, and that she is the same person who has been afflicted as described in the foregoing statement, and that she is now cured of the same, and that she is now able to get about as well as ever, and that she has not been troubled since.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the system to its normal state.

In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (new in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

A Cincinnati joke.—"Why is Tagby like the Ohio river?" "Don't know. Why is 'Beetle' like the Ohio river?" "Don't know. Why is 'Beetle' like the Ohio river?" "Don't know."

"What part did you find most difficult when you tried to get into the Ohio river?" "The part I found most difficult was getting in on the ground floor."—Tit-Bits.

DON'TS FOR SLIM WOMEN.

Don't walk to excess; a short walk will be beneficial, but long walks are flesh-reducing.

Don't wear black; black has a tendency to make anyone look slender. Light clothes are the most becoming.

Don't have your lingerie too close fitting; have your undershirts gathered around the hips and a full front in your underwear is good.

Don't strive for long-waisted effects or use pointed girdles; the longer you make yourself look the thinner you will appear.

Don't stay up too late at night; get at least nine hours' good sleep. A woman needs more sleep than a man, and nothing keeps her in good condition like lots of sleep.

Don't wear stripes; checks, plaids and horizontal effects are better for thin women. They should strive for becoming, deceiving effects if they study art in dressing at all.

Don't forget that a well-rounded figure makes you look younger and is considered a mark of beauty. The starched foods, massage, moderate exercise, rest and sleep will produce this.

Don't wear a large, broad-sided hat—it looks out of proportion, especially as the face of a slender girl is usually small. A moderate-sized or small hat will be found much better.

Don't fail to have your gowns made with an eye to hiding the fact that you are too slender. Full waists, fancy fronts and bouffant effects are best, while draped skirts or very full ones will detract from your slender appearance.—Courier-Journal.

A FEATHERED HOUSEBREAKER.

The Cow Bird and Its Pedatory Habits.

Stealthily and silently she pries among the thickets, following up the trail of warbler, sparrow or thrush like a sleuth-hound. Yonder a tiny yellow bird with a jet black cheek flits hither with a wisp of dry grass in her beak, and disappears in the branches of a small tree close to my studio door. Like the shadow of fate the cow-bird suddenly appears, and has doubtless soon ferreted out her eradle.

In a certain grassy bank not far from where I am writing, at the foot of an unsuspecting fern, a song sparrow has built her nest. It lies in a hollow among the dried leaves and grass, and is so artfully merged with its immediate surroundings that even though you know its precise location it still eludes you. Only yesterday the last finishing touches were made upon the nest, and this morning, as I might have anticipated from the excess of lip and twitter of the mother bird, I find the first pretty brown-spotted egg.

Surely our cow-bird has missed this secret haunt on her rounds. Be not deceived! Within a half hour after this egg was laid the sparrow and its mate, returning from a brief absence to view their prize, discover two eggs where they had been responsible for but one. The prowling foe had already discovered their secret; for she, too, is "an attendant on the spring," and had been simply biding her time. The parent birds once out of sight, she had stolen slyly upon the nest, and after a very brief interval as slyly retreated, leaving her questionable compliments, presumably with a self-satisfied chuckle. The intruded egg is so like its fellow as to be hardly distinguishable except in its slightly larger size. It is doubtful whether the sparrow, in particular, owing to this similarity, ever realizes the deception. Indeed, the event is possibly considered a cause for self-congratulation rather than otherwise—at least until her eyes are opened by the fateful denouement of a few weeks later. And thus the American cow-bird outwinks the cuckoo as an "attendant on the spring," taking her pick among the nurseries of featherdom, now victimizing the oriole by a brief sojourn in the swinging hammock in the elm, here stopping a moment to leave her charge to the care of an indigo bird, to-morrow creeping through the grass to the secreted nest of the Maryland yellow-throat, or Wilson's thrush, or chickadee. And, unaccountable as it would appear, here we find the same deadly tooth safely lodged in the dainty cobweb nest of the vireo, a fragile pendant fabric hung in the fork of a slender branch which it itself would barely appear sufficiently strong to sustain the weight of a cow-bird without emptying the nest.—William Hamilton Gibson, in Harper's Magazine.

MYSTERIOUS WAYS OF WARTS.
One That Was "Wished Off" of a Child's Finger.
"The more I study into the question of warts," said a well-known physician, the more convinced I am that there is but little known of them. It is surprising what few references are made to warts by the standard writers. In many of the leading books on surgery there is no mention at all of warts, and as a result physicians are almost as much in the dark about them as others. To tell the truth, I have got more information from old nurses about warts than I ever did from my medical or surgical lectures or from my reading. Hundreds and hundreds of times patients have asked me how to get rid of warts, and my answer has generally been to let them alone and that they would go away as mysteriously as they came. Of course, I could cut them off or burn them off with caustic or nitric acid, but my experience has been that two or three came back for every one so removed.

"A few weeks since I was visiting the wife of a southern senator, who has two grandchildren with her this winter. One of the grandchildren had a big wart on the end of the forefinger of the right hand, and, of course, hit it every time the child touched anything. I was asked if I could do anything to remove it, and I replied, as usual, to let it alone and that in a short time it would disappear. This, however, was but little comfort to the lady, who said the child, a little boy of four years, was, she thought, in constant pain from it. I then told her that if she wished the wart from the little fellow and on herself it would likely change places, and that it would be necessary for her to 'wish very hard' to make a sure transfer. I had forgotten all about it till a few days later, when I visited the lady again. Strange as it may sound, the wart had left the grandchild's finger and was on her own, and giving her a great deal of pain, too."—Washington Star.

Accounted for Her Vagaries.

"Women are queer creatures," said the man with the colored waistcoat to his neighbor as they stood in the ballroom.

"Yes. That's right," replied the other, "but why?"

"Well, now there's that woman over there. She was flirting desperately with me until a few minutes ago, but now she has suddenly stopped. I can't account for it. Why do you suppose she acts that way?"

"I am sure I don't know. Which one was it?"

"Over there. See that woman with the pink dress and the violets; the third from the end. She has her head turned, though she was looking at me a minute ago."

"The blonde?"

"No, the brunette next to her."

"Ah, yes. O, that's my wife," and he hastily left his new acquaintance.—Chicago Times-Herald.

From a small beginning this famous company has gained the enviable position it now holds through the unequalled excellence of its guns and ammunition. CURRENT TOPICS.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF.

FIFTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

(Special Session.)
In the senate, on the 23d, during an open session of forty minutes nearly 200 bills were introduced and many others were reported a back from committee, among the latter the free homestead bill and the immigration bill with the provision as to Canadian labor eliminated. The four great appropriation bills—the agricultural, the Indian, the navy and the general deficiency—were referred to the committee on appropriations. A resolution was agreed to calling upon the president for correspondence in the Dr. Ruiz case. In the house the tariff bill was read by the speaker and its discussion opened by Mr. Dingley, followed by Mr. Wheeler (dem. Ala.) in opposition. Other speeches for and against followed, and at 11 o'clock the house adjourned until eight, when the debate was continued.

In the senate, on the 23d, a resolution offered by Mr. Allen (pop. Neb.), directing the committee on civil service to inquire into the dismissal of certain employees of the bureau of animal industry, led to a long discussion and general denunciation of the civil service law, and was, after amendment, adopted. Three bills were passed among which one was to provide for flood sufferers; and several were introduced. In the house the debate on the tariff bill was continued, several speeches being made in the opposition to the tariff bill. The senate joint resolution appropriating $15,000 to enable the secretary of war to purchase tents for the homeless victims of the Mississippi valley floods was agreed to. An evening session devoted to a discussion of the tariff bill, was held.

In the senate, on the 24th, the agricultural bill was reported back in the shape in which it passed the house, and was placed on the calendar. Mr. Allen introduced a bill for the repeal and annulment of the civil service law and of all executive orders issued under it. A bill to restrict the exhibition of kinesthetic illustrations of prize fights was referred to the judiciary committee. The senate then went into executive session. In the house the third day of government to all a vacancy on account of the numerous vacancies in the committee. Nearly three hours were spent in executive session on the arbitration treaty without making material progress. The bankruptcy bill was then taken up and read in full, as was a substitute offered by Mr. Nelson (rep., Minn.), after which the senate adjourned. In the house, it was the last day of the general discussion on the arbitration treaty, the proceedings were unusually interesting. A large number of speeches on both sides were made. A night session was held for general debate on the treaty.

In the house, on the 24th, during the open session the civil service commission was again subjected to adverse criticism and ridicule by Mr. Gallinger, and the printed circular of the commission upon which he based his criticisms was read to the committee on civil service and retrenchment to investigate the whole subject. Resolutions of inquiry were offered and adopted as to the future disposition of the United Pacific railway property, and as to the arrest and imprisonment of American sailors in Cuba. After a protracted executive session the senate adjourned until the 25th. In the house, on the 25th, during the open session the five-minute rule began, but soon led to a debate based on democratic charges that republicans favored trusts and did not want to legislate against the railway property, and several changes of duty were made in the bill.

THE GREAT FLOODS.

The Situation Growing Grave Along the Upper Rivers.

The Area of Greatest Danger on the Lower Rivers Temporarily Removed to Mississippi, Lower Arkansas and Louisiana.

ST. LOUIS, March 27.—Territory covered by water or threatened with submersion may be divided into three parts. From Minnesota on the north and Nebraska and South Dakota on the west the rivers and streams are rising. The Cumberland and Tennessee and the Ohio at Paducah are falling. Cairo shows a stationary gauge, and from that point to below Memphis—where a slight fall is noted—the situation may be said to be improved; temporarily, at least. Below the Mississippi state line, however, the full effect of the flood is just beginning to be felt. Mississippi, lower Arkansas and Louisiana, in the south, are the localities now that are in the greatest danger. The residents from Cairo to Memphis probably will have almost stationary water until the northern freshet reaches them.

Friday added to the gravity of the situation along the Missouri, upper Mississippi and Illinois rivers, and the streams that feed them. St. Joseph reports a fall, but a higher gauge at Pierre, S. D., indicates that the danger is not past. The low lands along the Iowa, Illinois and upper Missouri banks are submerged. Farmers have begun to use boats as a means of transportation. Already anxiety regarding the levees is manifested. The melting snows have softened these embankments, making work of strengthening and repair necessary.

All this water from the north and west must, of course, reach the inundated districts before many days have passed.

Helena's gauge showed a further rise yesterday. Weather Observer Mills at that place does not expect stationary water for ten days. He sent yesterday to Washington a warning of probable disaster in the Tensas Basin, on the Atchafalaya and below Baton Rouge to New Orleans. The levees at Helena are expected to hold unless rough weather interrupts the succession of sunshine and still nights.

A Levee Board Engineer Charged with Cutting the Levee.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., March 26.—Theriver to-night stands 33.55, a slight decline for the 24 hours. The water on southern river points this evening are not altogether reassuring. The situation at Helena is pronounced ticklish, and at Greenville decidedly precarious, the levees at these points showing signs of succumbing to the water pressure. Large forces are employed upon them day and night. State convicts being at Greenville in force. Gov. McLaughlin also went there this evening in response to a telegram. There was a small break in the Arkansas district last night, but it is viewed with no particular concern. A number of other Mississippi points report the levees somewhat critical, with water crowded over them in places, while in others they are sloughing off.

Helena reiterates to-night the charge that Desha levees had been cut, parties declaring that they saw the levee board engineer do the cutting. The main witness against the alleged levee-cutting engineer says he protested, but without avail, and stood on the levee and saw his cribs and contents, some of his live-stock, fowls and household effects swept away by the water, thus let through the levees.

THE Town of Greenville, Miss. Six Feet Below Water Level, but Confident.

JACKSON, Miss., March 27.—A special from Greenville says that the river rose seven inches higher during the 24 hours ending at noon yesterday, and more was coming. The town of Greenville, between which and the river is a protection levee, is now six feet below the level of the water, but the natives have confidence in their ability to hold the fort. A letter from Greenville says: "The levees seem strong, but the water is within nine inches of the top, and rising. A break would mean the destruction of millions of dollars' worth of property in the great delta, where crops of cotton and corn have already been planted."

Freshet on the Withlacoochee River.

SAVANNAH, Ga., March 27.—A dispatch from Valdosta, Ga., says the rapidity with which the Withlacoochee rose last night indicates that there was a waterspout in the country about there. The river rose at the rate of two feet an hour and nearly twenty feet during the night. It ran over the tracks of the Plant system at Ouseley station and washed away a large part of the bridge there. All traffic on that line west of this city is suspended.

Seven washouts are reported between Valdosta and Montgomery. The construction trains on both roads here are working night and day to make repairs.

A dispatch from Quitman, Ga., reports the surrounding country flooded and Quitman cut off from the outside world. Several trestles have been washed away.

SYBIL ENCHANTS HIM.

The Russian Czar Said to Neglect His Wife for Sybil Sanderson.

NEW YORK, March 27.—The World has a dispatch from St. Petersburg to the effect that the relations between the young czar and his consort are strained, owing to the infatuation of Nicolas for Miss Sybil Sanderson, of California, the opera singer. The czar is said to have neglected his invalid wife in order to worship at the shrine of Miss Sanderson, who is playing an engagement at a theatre in St. Petersburg.

DUN'S COMMERCIAL REPORT.

Adverse Conditions Militating Against Resumption of Business Have Failed to Check an Increase Which, Though Gradual and Conservative, Is, on the Whole, Constant and Encouraging. Weekly Review of the Various Markets. Failures.

NEW YORK, March 27.—R. G. Dun & Co., say to-day in their review of trade: Markets have sustained such surprise as they have received of late with little loss. Foreign conditions and London alarms, the collapse of the iron ore combination, the destructive floods in the Mississippi valley and the decision of the supreme court against railway associations have been used to the utmost, but not even in railroad stocks has the result been important. With confidence that better times and larger business are coming men are less disposed every day to throw away good investments, and the very fact that prices of products are now low is regarded as a guarantee against much further decline. In all industries, also, the number of mills and shops and hands at work gradually increases.

The railroads have been subjected to so much loss of late by cutting of rates, in spite of all associations, that the possibility of open and unrestricted competition, instead of agreements which restrict only the more honest, may well have also been influenced. The earnings for March thus far, only four per cent. below last year's, compare not unfavorably with the full returns for February, seven per cent. below last year's.

The grain markets have lost, without reason, the gain they made without reason the previous week. Wheat supplies are running out, but nobody believes that there is coming a famine before June, when the harvesting of southern wheat will begin. Western receipts were over a third smaller than last year, and for four weeks have been 7,011,440 bushels, against 11,884,208 last year, but the better prospect for the crop of winter wheat has more weight.

Atlantic exports, flour included, were nearly as large for the week as last year, and for four weeks have been 5,099,728 bushels, against 5,501,220 last year. But corn exports have been 13,763,579 bushels, against 4,577,609 last year. When Europe buys in corn the equivalent of 6,400,000 bushels of wheat at less than 60 cents, the price of wheat is not easily advanced above 80 cents. Cotton was helped upward an eighth by the floor, but has lost half the gain, although manufacturing is more hopeful. Without change in prices goods were in better demand, and sales of 500,000 pieces print cloths result in stronger tone.

The final dissolution of the Lake iron ore pool has been expected ever since the Carnegie-Rockefeller deal, and insures low prices for ore the coming year, though perhaps not lower than in 1895. Mesabi facilities for production have vastly increased, and all the great steel-making concerns have secured mines of their own, while means of transportation have greatly enlarged. With assurances of cheap ore, hesitation about various products should diminish, and the demand is steadily increasing. Bars are still demoralized and at the lowest point, but for plates, sheets, wire rods and wire, and all nails, the demand is growing larger. The demand for rails continues enough to strengthen prices, although some speculative purchases are offered below the present price of mills.

Tin is shade lower, with larger arrivals, though the distribution has been considerable, and lead is decidedly stronger at 3.47, but copper is weak at 11.75. Increase in coke production appears, and more is assured by the purchase of works by the Cambria company, and while quotations are unchanged, outsiders are offering furnace at 1.70 per ton.

Speculation in wool has recorded larger sales for four weeks than ever before, 46,605,300 pounds, against 21,984,576 in the same weeks of 1892. Much more than half is for speculation, as nothing like the full capacity of mills is employed. Americans have also bought largely at London, 40,000 bales already. It is said, where the market is excited price of wool advanced 10 to 15 per cent. With heavy supplies here, these large imports and new wool coming in May, there may be found overloaded dealers. Prices here are still advancing and many kinds have risen two to three cents during the past month. The wool manufacture is steadily increasing, but cautiously, as it is too early to anticipate results from changes which may be made in duties.

Failures for the week have been 291 in the United States, against 259 last year, and 50 in Canada, against 39 last year.

SQUEEZE IN A MINE.

All the Employes Ordered Out in Time to Save a Horror.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., March 26.—A squeeze in the Red Ash vein of the Woodmont mine, near Kingston, has been going on for the past 24 hours and to-night it began to extend toward the foot of the shaft. The ripping and tearing of the pillars of coal had become so general that the inside officials ordered all the men out of the mine and by ten o'clock every miner and employe in the pits below landed safely on the surface.

The mine is very gaseous, and as the settling of the roof goes on it causes the gas to accumulate in large quantities.

JOINT TARIFF ASSOCIATION.

Will Not be Affected by the Supreme Court Decision.

CLEVELAND, O., March 27.—President S. R. Callaway of the Nickel Plate is of the opinion that the decision of the United States supreme court in the Transmissouri Freight association case will not affect the Joint Traffic association. The local roads allied with that organization are the Nickel Plate, Lake Shore, Big Four, Erie, Pennsylvania, and the Baltimore & Ohio. "The Joint Traffic association," he says, "is not a trust in any sense of the word."

THREE MEN KILLED.

A Frightful Explosion of Nitro-Glycerine at the Repauno Chemical Work—The Building Rose Bodily in the Air, a Great Hole in the Ground Marking the Spot Where It Had Stood. Another Explosion.

WOODSTOWN, N. J., March 27.—An explosion occurred yesterday at the Repauno chemical works at (Hibstown). Three men were killed and others injured.

David Hamilton.

The Repauno works are operated by the Duponts (of powder making fame), and are used for the manufacture of nitro-glycerine and gun cotton. The buildings are one-story frame structures, separated some distance from each other. The works have been very busy of late, and the force of employes was larger than usual.

The explosion yesterday occurred in the separating house, where the nitro-glycerine goes through one of the most delicate and dangerous processes. The three men who were blown to atoms were the only occupants of the building and the cause of the explosion cannot be learned. It was 12:20 o'clock when the explosion occurred and it made a tremendous noise.

At Paulsboro the shock was so great that the residents ran from their houses in alarm. Some of the workmen who were passing through the yard of the nitro-glycerine works say they saw the separating house rise bodily in the air and then they were thrown to the ground by the awful blast. Workmen in the other buildings of the plant ran out and fled for their lives, fearing additional explosions. After a lapse of a few minutes, however, when the danger had passed they returned and began to search for their unfortunate fellow-workmen.

Where the separating house had stood there was a great hole in the ground, and the trees for 300 yards around were denuded of their limbs and twisted by the force of the explosion. The bodies of the victims had been blown into fragments which were found scattered for a considerable distance around.

ANOTHER FATAL EXPLOSION.

COLUMBIA, S. C., March 27.—A sawmill boiler at Harsville, Darlington county, exploded yesterday morning, killing Engineer Adam Carter and his wife, who had brought him his dinner. The mill was demolished.

THE BOSS BIGAMIST.

James M. Gordy, the Alleged Wife Murderer Has a Marrying Record.

GEORGETOWN, Del., March 27.—Atty.-Gen. Robert C. White says he has received several communications which have convinced him that James M. Gordy, the accused murderer of his wife, Mrs. Mary Lewis Gordy, of New York, is the greatest bigamist on record. One woman writes to the attorney-general from New York and states emphatically that she is Gordy's wife, and that she knows of two women, one in Newark, N. J., and another in Brooklyn, N. Y., whom Gordy married within two weeks after he deserted her last December.

Another woman writes from Pittsburgh, giving a description of Gordy and the business he conducted. She winds up by declaring that Gordy is her husband and that he deserted her three weeks after their marriage last September.

The attorney general has received communications from Boston, New Haven and Chicago, which go to show that Gordy's marital ventures were not confined to any particular section of the country.

The authorities say that an investigation of Gordy's career will show that he has at least eight and possibly nine wives now living. The authorities also say that they believe Gordy inveigled the women into his schemes by marriage under fictitious names. Information was received by the attorney-general Thursday that Gordy was wanted in New Haven for alleged nefarious operations.

SANGUINARY STRUGGLE.

The Kind of Fight the Spaniards Have to Meet in Cuba.

HAVANA, March 27.—Stirring details have been received of the attack made a few days ago by the insurgents on the town of Paredes, in the jurisdiction of Sancti Spiritus. A Spaniard who witnessed the engagement says that the insurgents surrounded the Casariego fort, rushed up close to its walls, thrust their rifles through the port holes and fired repeatedly upon the garrison inside, in a hand-to-hand fight, both parties often seizing in their hands the weapons of their foes. Nearly all the wounds inflicted were mortal.

The Spanish, although their commander, Capt. Huertas, was wounded and disabled, did not yield, because they were protected by the fire of the neighboring Fort Piel. Upon observing this the insurgents attacked Fort Piel with the same reckless courage, and after a hot struggle succeeded in breaking down a door. Then they entered and killed all the garrison except one soldier, whom they took prisoner. After that they entered the town, burnt many houses and ransacked several stores. The losses on both sides were heavy and both showed the greatest courage, though the position of the Spaniards was more advantageous, as they fought inside the forts.

TO FIGHT FOR GREECE.

Young Hellenes Leave New York to Enlist Under King George's Banner.

NEW YORK, March 27.—One hundred and fifty sturdy young Greeks, after bidding an affectionate farewell to friends and countrymen at 11 o'clock last night, marched aboard the French Line steamer La Champagne, and at five o'clock this morning started for Greece, where they will offer their services to King George. With perhaps a dozen exceptions, all have served in the Greek army, a score or more having been officers.

SHE ATTACKED AN OFFICE.

But a Look at Her Face Convinced Her Husband She Had Failed.

Dr. Jones was sitting at the breakfast table when the postman called and deposited on the plate, among his letters, an ordinary express tag covered with postmarks and strange inscriptions. Mrs. Jones took possession of the tag and scrutinized it with deep perplexity.

"For goodness' sake tell me what this is, George," she said, at length.

Her husband glanced at it back and front.

"It appears to be a splendid official exemplification of how not to do it," he replied. "It is addressed to me and there is a two-cent stamp affixed to it, duly canceled. On the back is an official notice reading: 'Received without contents. Search for the same will be made if description is sent to inquiry department, New York

COLUMBIANA, APRIL 1, 1897.

The ninth anniversary of the Birmingham News was celebrated by issuing a large anniversary edition on March 27, for which the management deserve great credit. The News is rapidly becoming one of the best journals in the south and we wish her much success.

The papers on yesterday were teeming with fearful reports from the flood along the Mississippi. The levee having broken in three places above Greenville, the city is now in a precarious condition and, it is feared, will be almost completely submerged. New Orleans is also seriously threatened.

In our last issue we stated that the Plowman-Aldrich contest had been settled and resulted in Plowman being seated. In this we find that we were mistaken. Only has the taking of evidence been completed and the contest will be passed upon by the committee and decided sometime this month.

Have you asked the candidates for mayor and councilmen how they stand on the street lamp question? If not do so and tell them if they wish to be unanimously elected to promise to give us some lights, so that we can venture out on a dark night without endangering life and limb. Let us have the lights if a special tax has to be levied to get them.

The more the Dingley bill is studied and discussed the more infamous it appears. Especially will the poorer classes, those who need assistance most, be effected. While it will not, in the least, enhance the value of their farm products, it will, on the other hand, greatly increase the value of the necessities of life; thus only making the rich richer and the poor, poorer.

It seems that our republican friends are disagreeing somewhat as to who shall distribute the pie and who shall have the largest slice. Mosley seems to have carried his "rabbit foot" to Washington and to have spoiled Mr. Youngbloods plans a little. It is also stated that they have been given to understand by the "powers that be" that until they shall come to an agreement with each other neither side will get any pie. If this be true an amicable understanding will no doubt be reached at an early date.

A lower court in Missouri has held that the law providing the death penalty for train robbers is constitutional, the case in point being the Blue Cut robbery, for which three men are now in jail at Kansas City. The matter has been taken to the supreme court, which tribunal, it is believed in St. Louis, will uphold the lower court. Public sentiment, not only in Missouri, but the country at large, seems to be in favor of making the punishment for train robbery the gallows. Lighter punishments have been found wholly inadequate to the task of deterring would-be robbers from their infamous enterprises.—Savannah News.

The filibustering Steamer Laureda arrived at Philadelphia Saturday night after having successfully landed the most important expedition yet sent from this country to the Cuban patriots. The expedition was fitted out by the Cuban Junta in New York and consisted of about forty men some of whom were veterans of the ten years war. The insurgent minister of war Gen. Carlos Roloff commanded the expedition and succeeded in landing, besides the men mentioned above, 7,000 rifles, 3,000,000 cartridges, one Colt machine gun, two twelve-pounders, four tons of stick dynamite and a large quantity of food and medicine. The Laureda's successful trip and safe return caused much rejoicing among the Cubans and their sympathizers in this country.

Mr. Underwood, the able young member of congress from the Birmingham district, won his spurs in the house last Friday. Let it be borne in mind that he represents a district which it has often been said would be republican on the score of protection. Mr. Underwood met the great Pittsburg member, Mr. Dalzell, a recognized champion of the protective interests and completely upset his arguments. The people of Alabama do not need protection for coal and iron and no stronger evidence to that effect is needed than the able speech of the young member from the greatest iron district of the South. It will be noted that in this little tilt it was the iron center of Pennsylvania against the iron center of Alabama contending on the floor of congress and that the latter had the best of the argument.—Montgomery Advertiser.

Mr. Gage may agree with President McKinley in many matters, but certainly not on the tariff. Mr. Gage says: "If the United States of America is to take that position in the world's progress which we confidently hope for, it must be by the extension of its trade and commerce with other parts of the world. Whatever favors this favors our national development; whatever hinders this hampers and restricts our prospects." Now a high protective tariff hinders our trade with other parts of the world. To sell, we must buy. Just as soon as we put on a protective tariff other nations begin to retaliate. Canada is now getting ready for retaliation. Germany, France and other countries have had their ire aroused by the Dingley bill. Mr. Gage cannot entertain the views he uttered and be a high protectionist.—State Herald.

MUST LOOK TO HOME CAPITAL.

From the Houston Post.

It is almost impossible for the South to please the North, and especially to meet the requirements for investment of Northern capital, so it is the better policy to try and be independent of outside capitalists as far as possible.

For illustration: Here is the Boston Herald expressing the fear that the tendency in the southern states where there is no restrictive legislation upon the employment of labor, is to grind down the wage-earners and that the absence of such legislation arises largely from the "ignorance" and "incapability of combining" among southern laborers. The Herald appears to argue that such condition is undesirable for the investment of manufacturing capital.

Were the South to impose this restrictive legislation limiting the hours of labor, inhibiting child labor and providing for factory inspection and otherwise curbing the tyranny of many employers of labor, the cry would be that there was too much hostility towards capital in the South. Indeed, that objection is now often urged in the North when as a matter of fact Massachusetts, New York, Rhode Island and other eastern states today contain all these regulations so objectionable to capital, while southern codes are free from them.

If we "embarrass" capital we are too hostile to deserve it; if we leave it free to grind down labor we are too ignorant and too savage to encourage the investment of capital.

The fact is, there is still sectional prejudice in the North against the South, politically, socially and commercially, in spite of all the talk about "union and fraternity" once more. This underlying prejudice, based largely on old issues and largely on ignorance of this section, crops out on every possible occasion. There are a few long-headed northern men who have taken advantage of favorable conditions for money making in the South, but northern money in bulk has never yet indicated a disposition to take hold of southern development on a large scale as it has done in the middle and western states.

The sooner the South recognizes this fact the better for us.

Instead of begging for money from others, and apologizing for our conditions and pointing to our unorganized labor as an extra inducement, we should recognize the fact that we must work out our own salvation. There is considerable southern capital, and it should be induced to take hold of the manufacturing field. It might be done on a small scale at first. The establishments now in operation show uniform prosperity and great profit where skillfully managed. We should protect both our labor and our capital and confidently trust to our own unrivaled resources.

THE POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE.

From the Selma Times.

The board of trustees of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute for Girls, located at Montevallo, met Thursday noon in the governor's office, in Montgomery, and remained in session an hour or more.

Under the new law passed by the last legislature it became the duty of the board to elect a treasurer for the school, and Hon. George W. Ellis was selected. His duties will be independent of those of state treasurer, and a bond of $10,000 is to be given. The office will pay a nominal salary—$100 annually.

Treasurer Ellis is now confined to his room, being ill, and it is not known yet whether he will accept the trust conferred on him.

The board ordered the state treasurer to pay over to the school treasurer the sum of $3,000, which will be used for the purpose of pushing the institution through to a finished condition. It is already in handsome shape. The school started under adverse circumstances and opened with 133 pupils, while at present it numbers 224.

The personnel of students is very high, and the school has as complete an outfit as any in the South, and the dormitories have been enlarged to a splendid capacity. There is an excellent corps of teachers in charge, and the friends of the school believe that next session it will open with 500 pupils.

WHERE THE BURDEN WILL REST.

From the New York World.

Mr. Dingley makes on the floor of the house the remarkable assertion that the burden of restored McKinley rates will fall chiefly on "the schedules covering luxuries like tobacco, liquors, silks and laces."

Against this we have the figures of Mr. Dingley's own summary of the effects of the bill made on the 15th inst. "From sugar," he says, "we estimate $20,000,000 additional revenue." "We place the increased revenue from wool at $11,000,000. Anticipating that the imports of woollens will fall off nearly 50 per cent from the enormous imports of 1896, we estimate the increased revenue from this source under the proposed rates at $14,000,000."

CONFEDERATE PENSIONERS.

Editor Chronicle:

I would like to state through the columns of your paper, for the benefit of those interested, that the law for the benefit of needy confederate soldiers, &c., as amended by the recent legislature is, in substance, as follows: Any confederate soldier, or sailor, who served as such in the late war, who did not desert the service, who, from any cause, is now physically unable to make a living by labor, is entitled to a pension, provided he is a resident of this state at the time of making his application, and has been such for at least one year prior to making such application; and provided further, that his taxable property is not worth over Five Hundred Dollars, and his wife's separate estate is not worth over Five Hundred Dollars.

Widows of confederate soldiers or sailors, who reside in this state, and whose husbands were either killed, died of disease or from wounds during or since said war and up to the present time, are entitled to pensions where they have not since remarried; provided their husbands did not desert the service of the Confederate States; and provided further, that the taxable property of the widow is not worth more than $500.

It is provided further, that whenever a person is unable from physical inability to appear before the Judge of Probate to make affidavit to his or her application, he or she may make it before any Justice of the Peace of the county (not a Notary Public) stating therein such disability.

Where persons did not receive pensions in 1895 and 1896, owing to failure to make application within the time prescribed by law, or by some technical error in making such application, they can make application now for those years.

All applications must be made before the first of June in each year. D. R. McMillan, Judge of Probate.

MR. CLEVELAND'S MEMOIRS.

A Washington dispatch to the Chicago Post says: "President Cleveland told his personal friend and admirer, ex-Commissioner of Agriculture Coleman, that he was going to devote his spare time during the next few years, or an indefinite period, to the writing of a book on autobiographical lines, dating from his election to the majority of Buffalo down to the 4th of March, 1897. He says he is going to live the life of a retired gentleman so far as he may be permitted to do so, and will not engage in the practice of law. He says he will not open a law office himself, or be a member of any law firm, either with Mr. Carlisle or anybody else. He said, further, that he would never appear before a jury publicly or in any court in the trial of a lawsuit. He has now arrived at the age of 60 years, and, being in the possession of a comfortable competence, will devote the remainder of his life to quiet pursuits.

He laughingly disclaimed any intention of engaging in the systematic study of theology, as wildly imaginative correspondents have been saying he would do, and again he repeated his remark that he would devote his energies to the preparation of an autobiography which would be a history of the important events in which he has personally participated during his official career as mayor, governor and president. He said he has been accumulating a large amount of data bearing upon the subject, and would take his time to compile the story that he intended to tell, and make it as complete as possible.

"Mr. Cleveland has no idea how long it will take to complete this self-imposed work, but it is very clear that he anticipates great pleasure in its preparation. He will go from Washington to Princeton into the home which Mrs. Cleveland has bought, and declares it to be his intention to spend his winters in Princeton and his summers at Buzzard's Bay.

ALL RICH BUT THE PRESIDENT.

From the Philadelphia Bulletin.

The new cabinet is well-up largely from among rich or well-to-do republicans. There is none among them, so far as is known, that has the reputation of being a poor man. As a rule, they are men of substance that has been accumulated by their own thrift and energies, as is notably the case with Sherman, Alger, Gage and Gary. Several of the new cabinet officers have reputations for liberality and hospitality, and as they have the means to gratify these tastes, it is altogether likely that the social side of the McKinley administration will be as agreeable as money can make it. As for the Hon. Marcus A. Hanna, who will probably be more powerful in the White House than all the cabinet put together, he has both riches and generosity. The new vice-president is also the possessor of a large fortune. The man apparently of the simplest habits and the leanest purse in the new White House circles is William McKinley.

THE SOUTHERN RAILWAY'S EXHIBIT AT THE TENNESSEE CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Arrangements have been perfected by which the Southern Railway's territory will be represented at the exposition which opens at Nashville on May 1. This, like former exhibits made by that company, will include sample specimens of mineral, agricultural, forest and other products of the states of Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, East Tennessee and Kentucky. This company's exhibit at the Atlanta and Pittsburgh Expositions attracted the attention of the agriculturist, manufacturer, minor, stock-raiser and others, and did more to educate the visitors to an appreciation of the great wealth and possibilities of the South than any other one exhibit that was shown, and it is the policy of the company to actively continue this method of advertising. The scenic beauties of the country through which the Southern Railway runs will not be neglected in this exhibit.

Practically, this exhibit will be a bureau of information, so that visitors from the North and abroad can obtain specific data relative to all branches of industry in and tributary to the vast number of points on the Southern Railway. This exhibit is under the direction of the Land and Industrial Department of the Southern Railway with headquarters at Washington, D. C. and persons located along that system having exhibit material that they think will interest the public and thereby help advance the best interest of the section from which it comes, should at once communicate with the agent of that department.

This is an exhibit in which every citizen of this section should be interested, and we hope that some of our readers can supply something to represent our territory.

ELECTRIC LOCOMOTIVES.

Some New French Ones Expected to Make 100 Miles an Hour.

A new electric locomotive of large dimensions, calculated to draw trains of double the weight of those attached to ordinary engines at a rate of 62 miles an hour, has been tried with success on the Western Railroad of France line. The first experiments of this kind were made in 1893 between Havre and Bouzeville with an electric locomotive, which behaved well throughout the trial trip.

Owing to the success of this machine the company's engineers constructed two larger locomotives, and it is one of these which has just been tested. It is 57 feet long and of 1,350 horsepower. In spite of their size they wear out the rails less than ordinary locomotives, as the weight is distributed on eight axles instead of four or five.

They are safer than the others, owing to their elastic character, which enables them to make curves with security at full speed. Great things, are in fact, expected from these contrivances, which, when perfected, will do 100 to 115 miles an hour.

In a Bad Way.

From the Chicago Tribune.

The man from the city, whose buggy had mired in a particularly bad piece of road, was lashing his horse and swearing in a loud and reckless way. He stopped a moment to address a Quaker farmer who was driving carefully around the mudhole.

"Why don't you keep the crust of the earth in better condition in this neighborhood, old man?" he asked.

"Friend," answered the unruffled agriculturist in drab, climbing leisurely out of his wagon and coming to the assistance of his fellow-traveler, "these ought to be grateful that the crust has not given way and let thee down into the brimstone lake in the center!"

Mrs. A. Inveen, residing at 720 Henry St., Alton, Ill., suffered with sciatic rheumatism for over eight months. She doctored for it nearly the whole of this time, using various remedies recommended by friends, and was treated by the physicians, but received no relief. She then used one and a half bottles of Chamberlain's Pain Balm, which effected a complete cure. This is published at her request, as she wants others similarly afflicted to know what cured her. The big ocean grey hounds will soon, it is thought, be equipped with lifeboats harnessed to balloons, so as to be practically unsinkable. Cylinders filled with compressed gas will be placed in apartments of the lifeboats, and from these the balloon which will be harnessed with cords to a hollow mast connected with the cylinders, is inflated. The mast, which is of iron tubing, is adjustable, and when turned forward, the big balloon acts as a sail, oars proving quite unnecessary. The combination boat will doubtless prove of the greatest service in saving people far out at sea. In a recent test made it was shown that even with the boat filled with water to the gunwales, the lifting power of the balloon prevented the craft from either sinking or upsetting.—Newcastle Chronicle.

Two years ago R. J. Warren, a druggist at Pleasant Brook, N. Y., bought a small supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He sums up the result as follows: "At that time the goods were unknown in this section; today Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is a household word." It is the same in hundreds of communities. Wherever the good qualities of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy become known the people will have nothing else. For sale by J. E. Seale & Co., Druggists.

Blood Brains Money

A sick man can't make money. That's because his brain won't work. A man won't do any work unless he is properly fed. Neither will a brain. If the brain is not kept in good condition with pure, rich blood, it won't produce much. Men who fail, and men who don't, often have what they call "Nervous Prostration." Nine times in ten the nervous trouble is purely secondary. The real sickness is in their digestion and in their blood. If a man keeps his digestion in good order, and keeps his body full of pure, rich blood, he is never going to be very sick.

Johnston's Sarsaparilla is made for people who want to get well and stay well. Sarsaparilla is a simple "grandmother" remedy. But it cures. It purifies and enriches the blood and sends it tingling to every part of the body. That is the way it cures all ailments of the brain and nerves—cures insomnia—cures dyspepsia, rheumatism, scrofula, and every other blood disease. It clears the complexion, plumps out the cheeks, and brings back the sparkle to lifeless eyes.

One Dollar is the price, and One thousand Dollars is the health-giving value of every Quart Bottle of Johnston's Sarsaparilla.

A Letter to Christian Endeavorers.

AUBURN, ALA., March 15, 1897.

MY DEAR FRIEND AND BROTHER:

It is with peculiar pleasure that I inform you of the work of our College Young Men's Christian Association, that we may have your sympathy, prayers, words of cheer and support.

Our work is, 1. To unite all students in college who desire to promote their own spiritual life, actively and influence. 2. To make the new students feel at home in our midst, to throw around them wholesome influence, and to give them a proper start in their college career. 3. To win our fellow students one by one to Christ. 4. To develop well-rounded christian manhood in our members and associates. 5. To influence them to place their lives, on leaving the college, where they will count most for God and for humanity.

Besides exerting a marked general religious influence over the student body, this Association has been within the last two years, instrumental in leading 65 students to accept and confess Christ. We have this year 45 in Bible classes, doing daily conscientious, prayerful study. We have also circulated 150 evangelical, devotional and missionary books, the reading of which has marked epochs in the lives of many.

While this most essential work has been recognized and appreciated by all well acquainted with our college, ours is the only organization here without a home. But we have recently secured a room, and that we may do more effective work we are trying to fit it up neatly and attractively with organ, carpet, chairs, tables, etc., which will cost us at least $200. Our membership being composed chiefly of poor, yet deserving boys, we can not furnish our room without some help from friends of our college and Association. Having made a thorough canvass of faculty and students and lacking about $100, yet, any amount, whether large or small, you may feel glad to invest in this noble work of protecting young men at the period when building life-characters will be gratefully received and properly and judiciously applied. May we have your daily prayers, and receive any information about those who may enter our college in the future as we wish to correspond with all before they enter.

Very sincerely yours,
W. J. BEESON,
President of Y. M. C. A.

Wilsonville Waifs.

H. L. Sanders and family visited relatives in Calera last week. Mr. Roberts, of Childersburg, held the section force down during Mr. Sanders absence.

We understand Mr. Bolin has succeeded in landing the parties in jail at Chicago who quite recently swindled him out of several cars of lumber. This is speaking well for Mr. Bolin as these persons are noted thieves, and have for some time been swindling lumber firms all over the United States. Mr. Bolin is the only man that has succeeded in securing sufficient evidence to place these men under arrest.

Mrs. Hardy Nelson, Sr., of Columbiana, visited Dr. Nelson's family last week.

The woods are simply beautiful now and lovers of wild flowers and artistic scenes are in their glory. The beauty about it is, that the flowers are getting more and more abundant and luxurious every day, and will be in their zenith in about two weeks.

A few of our young people met at the residence of T. G. Morey last Friday night and spent a few pleasant hours.

The Chronicle is quite a favorite journal with the Harpersville people and the new editor is giving very general satisfaction. Long may he live and marry just who he pleases.

The dogwood trees are in full bloom; the honey-suckle will soon shoot forth and it won't be long until the school boy and girl will be roaming over the hills and valleys hunting sweet-shrubs.

Rev. Mr. Roberts filled his regular appointment at the Methodist church last Sunday.

It was announced last Sunday that Rev. Mr. Walker would preach at the Presbyterian church next Sunday at 11 o'clock and Rev. W. J. Ray at the Baptist church on the second Sunday at half past two o'clock. Don't forget the time but come out and hear both.

HUMAN NATURE.

Always "Plum Natural" Around Rocky Creek.

A Cross Roads "Reins" A Choice Article of "White Ink"—Circumstantial Evidence—One Rock for Two Birds.

The latest and most freshest news which we have heard from over in Cyclone Streak was to the sad extent that Black Jack Wiggins was sick and, and more than probable to make a die of it.

People that know the records and the history of Rocky Creek and the surrounding country might wonder for the reasons why, but I can put my hand in yours to-day, and tell the truth and nothing but the truth when I say that I would mortally hate to see Black Jack Wiggins, of Cyclone Streak, come across with his last load of poles.

Over at the Cross Roads.

Once upon a time some twenty years ago, or maybe a little rise of that, me and Black Jack got into a tremendous bad fight over at the Cross Roads one Saturday evening. No, sir. So far as I know there wasn't any female curiosity in the case. But there was American politics and mean whisky and fire-eating fools at both ends of the line.

In them good old days we didn't have so infernal much party machinery in the elections. It was a wide open, free-for-all scrub race, in which the best man always came down under the wire first.

That was on a Saturday, you understand, and the election was to come off on the next following Monday. Consequently the boys had rounded up at the Cross Roads for the last final rally before the old cat lit. "White ink" and "spirits-of-cats-a-fightin'" flowed free and promiscuous till I reckon the old devil went and picked him out a soft place in some shady corner to lay down and laugh. It did look like the "documents" were comin his way with a rush, and that was enough to tickle the old scoundrel beast most to death.

Well, I will not try to tell you—I couldn't if I would—right exactly when and how the storm ruz between me and Black Jack Wiggins. Maybe it was his fault and maybe it was mine. But this much I do know to a dead and buried certainty—me and Black Jack we had it, up and down and over and under. And then when the dust cleared away there was blood and hair and election signs on every hand, whilst the ground was tore up as from a bear fight.

Hit's been so monstrous long ago till I can't exactly remember everything for certain, but I recollect as fresh and clear as if it was but only yesterday that my wife's husband did have to take and tote a most tremendous good beatin from a man by the name of Black Jack Wiggins, of Cyclone Streak. The general style and shape in which I returned back to the home base that night was a plum scandalation on the Sanders family. And the next mornin when I got up and went to the lookin glass, bless the heavens if I didn't have to stop and turn around and pinch myself to be dead certain whether it was me or not. For three or four days henceforwards after that I couldn't even budge my classic countenance in warm water without sufferin the most severest pain, and it was somethin better than a week before I recovered and braced up sufficient to go forth onest more and face the green and busy world.

That lonesome Homely Feeling.

But in the main time garden truck was rather scanty and rations had run down powerful at our house. We had just naturally come up to the forks of the road—somethin had to be done, or somebody had to suffer. The wolf was scratchin at the back door, and the poorhouse loomed up over the western hills, as it were.

So in orderment to settle the meat and bread question I hooked up the wagon and team and pulled out over to the railroad station after a little load of provisions which had come for me. And when I first driv up who do you reckon was the first man I saw standin there—who but Black Jack Wiggins, of Cyclone Streak?

No, I didn't turn around and go on back home with my empty wagon, but I felt a right smart like Mart Mayo was in regards to the church—I had a powerful leanin that way.

In so far back as the records run Mart Mayo never went to meetin but onest in his life, and then he was so scoundrel drunk that he didn't know where he was goin till he got there. He was standin outside by the steps leanin up agin the church, when the preacher came along.

"Do you belong to the church?" says the good man.

"Not as anybody knows of," says Mart, "but you will take notice that I have a powerful leanin that way."

Naturally, of course, the railroad station was a monstrous lonesome lookin place to me that day, and I never did know till then what great gods of truth had been set forth in that good old song—"Home, Sweet Home." But our bread and meat was there at the station, and a hungry man will take his chances in many a close place in orderment to smooth out the wrinkles from the brow band of his breeches. Anyhow, I faced the music with fear and tremblin and driv up and got out and dropped the traces. I looked at Black Jack, and Black Jack he looked at me—mad and steady like.

"Come to me, lufe," says he.

"What's the matter now, Black Jack?" says I.

"Let's take a little somethin for a change of breath," says he, and with that he went down in his pistol pocket and come forth with a bottle of "white ink."

Well, as anybody knows, I didn't need no spirits that day. But right then I felt like I would rather take a nibble with Black Jack Wiggins, of Cyclone Streak, than any livin mortal man on the broad bosom of the whole discovered earth. And I never could tell why, but it did riley seem to me like that was the best corn whisky I had ever tasted since the day and hour when I was born. At the same time Black

Jack was so friendly and social like and pleasant till he soon made me forget all about the little twistification which me and him had got into that Saturday evening over at the Cross Roads. We kept up the famillious confabulation till I had bit off three or four plugs of that early runnin of the corn, and then we shook hands across the bloody chasm of the past. We parted friends, and that friendship we have maintained from that good day down to this blessed hour.

So that's what makes me tell you what I do in regards to the news we heard the other day—which I do hope and trust it will not turn out as bad as the reports.

And may the God of the brave and the honest-hearted bless Black Jack Wiggins, of Cyclone Streak.

Circumstantial Evidence.

Along in the spring of the year—when the sun shines warm and pleasant, whilst the dogwood trees are bloomin, and you feel so loose and lazy—in the general surroundins always put me in mind of a strong case of circumstantial evidence which leaked out onest upon a time in regards to Will Tom Picken and Miss Mamie Lou Galloway.

They have since mated off for good and settled down to business and are now mixin clothes in one of the loveliest and most happiest homes in the settlement. But at that particular time they were right slap kerbab in the middle of love's young dream, as it were, and between the two they had worked up a tremendous bad case of it. They had been courtin and carryin on together as reglar and frequent as pig tracks for six months past, and the country was then seriously threatened with a wedding.

One Saturday in the first warm days of spring we got up a big picnic over at Stringer's old mill, and about dinner time who do you reckon driv up in one of these elost built buggies—who but Will Tom and Miss Mamie Lou? Comin along the road in the meantime it would seem like they had been caught in one of them pleasant April showers and both of them got wet. Now you will please recollect that Miss Mamie Lou was dressed in white, with blue ribbons in her hair and a blood red belt around her waist. I reckon no doubts they had been too busy layin their future plans to take any particular notice of what had come to pass. But at any rates, when they driv up in the crowd and jumped out of the buggy, by gracious the cold sleeve which Will Tom wore on his left arm was painted a gay and gorgeous red from elbow to cuff and back again. At the same time anybody could shet one eye and look and see that the onliest red thing in the whole lay-out was the lovely belt which Miss Mamie Lou wore. The blame thing had got wet and run in the wash.

One Rock for Two Birds.

Which the same that puts me in mind of another place where circumstantial evidence got in some strong and tellin onest.

Once upon a time John Andrew Milligan and Miss Rosebud Buckalew took a fool notion that they would go up to the state fair together, and then took the cars and went. They spent the day takin in the sights and had a most festive nice time, to hear them tell it, but on their return back home that night they met with a sad and terrible accident.

How did it happen? Well, all I know about it is what John Andrew told me and Miss Rosebud told mother, and they didn't make no promise to keep no grave-yard secrets in the case.

Anyhow, from what they say, some scoundrel beast throwed a rock into the car where they were ridin side by side. The same rock crashed through the glass window, knocked the breath out Miss Rosebud and broke three fingers on John Andrew's left hand at one lick.

And that is all I know about it.

ARTIFICIAL SILK.

How Large Quantities of It Are Manufactured in France.

Many people are feeling interest in the manufacture of silk from wood pulp, as it bids fair to become a great industry. Count Hilaire de Chardonnet had been for a long time making experiments in this direction, meeting with many difficulties and discouragements, until he felt that he had achieved a degree of success that warranted his founding, in 1891, a company to carry his invention. The enterprise is a great commercial success. He has continual-ly since that time employed a large number of chemists and eminent engineers to aid him in his process, until now at Besancon 300 kilos of silk are made daily, of a quality said to rival the best products of China and Japan.

The demand is so great that this factory is to be enlarged in order to put out over 800 to 1,200 kilos per diem. Here 12,000 little glass silk worms are utilized, these being fractions of glass tubes, of which the lower extremity has a capillary opening, through which passes, by the action of powerful pressure, a liquid matter, which is nitro-cellulose, in the form of a special colloid. This is transformed by drying into a filament of silk scarcely perceptible, and serves to constitute the final thread.

No fewer than ten of these would be required to make up the thickness of a human hair. These almost invisible filaments, forced through the orifices of the tubes under pneumatic pressure, are passed by nimble-fingered girls through the guides and on the bobbins. After being spun the silk must be denitrified, to render it non-inflammable. Finally, the hanks are placed on two revolving rollers, which stretch and iron them, producing that high degree of lustre which is a notable feature of artificial silk.

No Strawberry Mark.

Not long since a man who claimed to be a lineal descendant of Montezuma called at the South Kensington museum in London and asked to see a mummy of an Aztec prince who belonged to the Montezuma family. When shown the remains the gentleman gazed long and anxiously, but owing to the ravages of time and the poor work of the ancient embalmers he could not distinguish any strawberry mark on the left arm, and had to leave the museum in a state of painful uncertainty.—Chicago Tribune.

HYGIENIC COOKERY.

Homemade Bread Is the Best for Children.

In the first place do not feed the children on baker's bread if you can possibly manage to give them a good home-made loaf; the four used in the ordinary baker's loaf does not compare favorably with that used in making bread at home, as to the amount of nutriment contained in it, and the extraordinary baker's loaf has had the fermenting process so extended that not a little of the proportion of nutriment which it originally possessed has been destroyed before it is baked. And again; the baking of the baker's loaf is very frequently so indifferently performed as to make of it a dangerous article of food; when fresh, and no one craves it stale, except for toast. And still again; all bakers are not so superior to the temptation presented by successfully manipulated adulterants as to place their breads beyond suspicion.

Then, do not attempt to feed and nourish children—nor anyone else for that matter—on the "beautiful, white loaf" of which, in the ignorance of our hearts, we have been prone to boast. As a "staff of life," and that is what our bread, and, again, especially our children's bread, is supposed to be, the "beautiful white loaf" is a fraud. As a starch food it is an eminent success and, undoubtedly, very delicious, and may be used occasionally to vary the monotony of the usual bill of fare. But it gives to us little except heat and fat, while the brown breads give food to all parts of the body and constitute a true, complete food. I sincerely wish that I could persuade all housemothers to take this matter to heart. Our children are fed so largely on bread and consume, comparatively speaking, so small a proportion of meat that it is of first importance that we should give to them in their bread all the necessary materials for the proper building of their bodies; and that we should deliberately give to them only a part of their proper food and deliberately throw away the rest because of the foolish prejudice in favor of a white loaf is most remarkable and most consurable. Certainly there is some choice between the two kinds of bread as to taste, but the difference is so slight, and a preference for one or the other so largely a matter of habit, that this side of the question is of but little moment. And particularly it need not be considered where the children are concerned, except as an argument in its favor, for I have never known a child who would not select the entire wheat or graham bread in preference to the white.—Anna C. Pollok, in Washington Home Magazine.

WET DRESSING.

How to Prepare and Apply the Damp Compress.

A wet dressing, or compress, as it is called, consists of a moist cloth next the skin, a slightly larger piece of oiled paper or mackintosh above the wet cloth, and two or three thicknesses of a flannel piece of flannel above this, the whole bandaged sufficiently tight to exclude the air.

The object of a wet dressing is to relax and soften the skin and the flesh immediately underneath, and to act as a local sedative to the nerves. Its use tends to relieve congestion and inflammation. It also acts as a counter-irritant, drawing organic and deep-seated inflammation to the surface.

The wet dressing corresponds to a warm bath at 98 to 100 degrees Fahrenheit. To be of service it should be continued for a considerable time.

This form of treatment is applicable to chronic stiffening of the joints, sprains and bruises of all kinds. The heat and swelling rapidly disappear, though the stiffness may require proper manipulation after the removal of the bandage.

By using it as a counter-irritant, applied to the feet, it is possible to control the circulation of the blood in the brain. A convenient method is to wring a pair of cotton socks out of warm water; put them on the feet and cover them with two pairs of knitted woolen socks. A compress may be made for the hands by using gloves in the same method.

Wet dressings applied to the pit of the stomach are of great value in inflammatory conditions of the digestive tract. In these cases we may simply use a towel wrung out of hot water. The towel is kept in position by two or three folds of flannel whipped around the body, and should be changed every hour or two.

By moistening the compress with liniments, mustard or antiseptic solutions such various effects may be obtained as the particular nature of the case seems to require.—Youth's Companion.

Mutton Croquettes.

Mutton croquettes make a nice entree. For one cup of finely-chopped mutton add to it two-thirds of a cupful of boiled rice, season plentifully with salt and pepper, add two tablespoonfuls of butter, and turn over the whole half a cupful of boiling milk. Put it over the fire until the mixture is boiling hot; then stir in a beaten egg and take it from the fire at once. Then stir in two tablespoonfuls of chopped parsley. When the mixture becomes cold roll it into any shape desired, cover the croquettes with egg and fine crumbs, and cook them in boiling fat to a nice brown. Arrange the croquettes on a hot platter and pour cream Bechamel sauce around them or serve them with a currant jelly sauce.—Boston Budget.

Finger Rolls.

Make a good bread dough and before kneading for the second rising, work in a tablespoonful of melted butter for each quart of flour represented in the dough. After it has risen the second time roll into a sheet somewhat less than half an inch thick. Cut this into strips an inch wide and four inches long. Roll these lightly under the hand till they are round, lay in a floured baking pan, let stand ten minutes and bake in a moderate oven to a pale brown. These are indispensable at luncheons and "high teas."—Detroit Free Press.

Creamy Candy.

To make cream candy place over the fire a vessel containing two large cupfuls of granulated sugar and half a dozen tablespoonfuls of water. Let the mixture boil until, when a little of the sirup is dropped into a cup of cold water, it will harden. The moment it will do this add two teaspoonfuls of vanilla and a small teaspoonful of cream of tartar. Then turn into a buttered dish, and when cool enough to handle with the hands pull it until it is white, cut into short lengths and set it away to get cold.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Spring Cleaning.

Spring cleaning need not necessarily be made the drudgery it is if properly done. Paints, floors, hard walls and windows may all be cleaned without rubbing; by wiping over with strong tides made of Ivory soap and hot, soft water, then rinsed and dried. A room thus cleaned will be fresh and sweet, with no unpleasant odor of strong soaps or cleaning fluids.

Milton Reizenstein, a graduate student of the Johns Hopkins University, of Baltimore, has prepared a monograph on a year or a degree, which he expects to receive next June. He has chosen for his subject the history of the B. & O. R. R. from its inception on the night of February 12th, 1827, when 25 of the leading business men of Baltimore met at the home of Philip E. Thomas and devised means whereby the trade of Baltimore with the West could be restored. It was at this meeting that the company was organized which afterwards built the B. & O. R. R. Mr. Reizenstein's monograph takes up the history of the road from that night till times when it was a leading business enterprise in 1853. The 70th anniversary of the B. & O. R. R. Reforms Need More Than a Day

To bring them about, and are always more complete and lasting when they proceed with steady regularity to a consummation. Few of the observant among us can have failed to notice that permanently healthful changes in the human system are not wrought by abrupt and violent means, and that those are the most salutary medicines which are progressive. CURRENT TOPICS.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF.

FIFTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

In the senate, on the 29th, during a short open session, a bill was passed appropriating $250,000 to be expended in saving life and property in the flooded lands of the Mississippi valley; also a bill to approve a compromise and settlement between the United States and the state of Arkansas. Two hours and a half was spent in executive session discussing the arbitration treaty. In the house, during the discussion, in committee of the whole, of the tariff bill, the high rates of duty imposed in the cotton and woolen schedules were attacked by Messrs. McCall and Levering, of Massachusetts, and defended by Messrs. Grosvenor (O.), Russell (Conn.) and Dingell (Me.). When the committee rose the house passed a joint resolution making immediately available $250,000 for protection of life and property in the lower Mississippi valley.
In the senate, on the 30th, Mr. Allen (pop. Neb.) spoke more than an hour to prove that congress does not possess the constitutional power to impose tariff duties on articles of daily consumption for the express and avowed purpose of increasing the private fortunes of one class of citizens at the expense of the masses. House amendments to senate joint resolution appropriating $250,000 to aid in protecting life and property in the Mississippi floods were concurred in and the joint resolution sent to the president. In the house the day was nearly all spent in disposing of amendments to the tariff bill offered by the committee on ways and means, principally to correct the phraseology or to make the classification clearer. Among others, an amendment making books, maps and charts for the use of schools, colleges and public libraries on the free list was agreed to; also one restoring the McKinley rates on horses and mules.
In the senate, on the 30th, the only matters of public interest treated in open session were two resolutions upon the subject of Cuba, both of which went over without action. At 12:25 p. m. the senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business, including the arbitration treaty and the question of filling the vacancies in the standing committees. In the house, the debate on the tariff bill during the five-minute rule session, including the arbitration treaty, was continued. The affirmative vote was 199; the negative vote, 197. The affirmative vote of 197 was secured by the aid of the democrats and four populists.
In the senate, on the 1st, during the hour of the session, the joint resolution authorizing the secretary of the navy to place a war vessel and a chartered merchant vessel at the disposal of the collector of the port of New York for transporting supplies to relieve the famine-stricken people of India, introduced by Mr. Morgan (dem. Ala.), as to letters of Maximo Gomez to President Cleveland and President McKinley was passed; also the resolution, offered by Mr. Mills (dem. Tex.), as to the obligations assumed by the United States toward the people of Cuba in asserting and maintaining the right to prevent the acquisition of the island by any European power. The senate was in executive session from 1 p. m. until 5:15, when it adjourned to the 5th. The house was not in session on the 1st.

PERSONAL AND GENERAL.

Hon. THOMAS F. BAYARD, late United States ambassador to the court of St. James, with his family, will sail for New York on either May 8 or May 15. The schooner Robert Levers arrived at San Francisco, on the 29th, from Honolulu, bringing news of a serious uprising of Japanese laborers on the islands, which, however, for the time, was promptly quelled by the militia, reinforced by volunteers.
The bank at Biggsville, Ill., was burglarized early on the morning of the 30th. Three dynamite explosions broke the vault, but the safe, in which the money was kept, was not opened. The robbers got $400 in the vault and escaped on a stolen hand-car.
Just at dusk, on the evening of the 30th, the town of Chandler, Okla., was struck by a cyclone which destroyed everything in its path, but one building, a hotel, being left intact. The first report said that a dozen or more persons had been killed, and 150 badly injured, while a later dispatch said many others were missing and thought to be dead under the ruins. Only daylight could reveal the true state of things.
C. N. BUDN, of Sparta, Tenn., killed his wife, on the 30th, and then committed suicide. He left a letter saying he committed the crime because his wife did not love him.
THERE was an accident, on the 31st, on the Hoosac Tunnel & Wilmington road, a quarter of a mile below Readsboro, Mass. The cars rolled over on their sides and lodged on the brink of a bank 25 feet high. Several passengers were more or less injured, but no fatalities occurred. Spreading rails caused the accident.
The boom in Argentine securities is continuing on the London stock exchange, the activity being due to the decision of the Argentine government to resume payment of full interest upon the debt and cancel the obligation of the year in advance of the time agreed upon.
LATER news from the cyclone-swept town of Chandler, Okla., greatly increases the number of the dead, with the added horror that many of these met their fate in the flames that destroyed the ruins of their homes or places of business.
The Dingley tariff bill passed the house on the 31st—205 yeas, 121 nays; present and not voting, 21. Five democrats—Broussard, Hovey and Meyer, of Louisiana, and Kieberg and Slayden, of Texas, voted for the bill amid applause.
TEN business houses at Albany, Ind., were destroyed by fire on the 31st. Loss, $40,000; insurance, about $20,000.

IN BROAD DAYLIGHT.

The Boy Messenger of a Chicago Firm Beaten, Bound and Gagged, and Robbed of $3,500 by the Driver of the Firm's Wagon. Assisted by Two Confederates Who Were Conveniently Posted on the Twelfth Street Viaduct.

CHICAGO, April 3.—Christ Schultz, aged 15, a messenger for the wholesale clothing firm of Kuhn, Nathan & Fisher, at Van Buren and Franklin streets, was robbed of $3,500 at 11 a. m., on the Twelfth street viaduct, near the Nickel Plate depot. Edward Wilson, driver of a delivery wagon for the firm, with two confederates, committed the crime. They knocked the boy in the head with a billy, while he was riding on the seat of the wagon. Schultz was bound and gagged and left lying unconscious in the bottom of the wagon, while Wilson and his confederates made good their escape. Shortly after ten o'clock the boy had been sent by the cashier of the clothing firm to the Metropolitan national bank, 184 LaSalle street, and cashed a check for $3,500 with which to pay the cutters of the concern. As is customary the messenger was accompanied by Edward Wilson, who has charge of the delivery wagon, also the property of the clothing firm. After cashing the check Schultz placed the money in a satchel, which he carried on his lap. On reaching the viaduct Schultz was dealt a heavy blow on the head with a billy. He saw Wilson with the weapon in his hand motion to two other men, who were standing on the viaduct. All three then boarded the wagon, bound and gagged the youth, stuffing handkerchiefs in his mouth. With a knife Wilson cut open the grip and put the $3,500 in his pockets. The three men then jumped from the wagon and escaped. Schultz is in a dangerous condition from wounds received.

TWO BROTHERS HANGED.

They Lay Their Fall to Reading Vicious Books.

NEW ORLEANS, April 3.—Ernest and Alex. Blancos were hanged at 2:11 o'clock yesterday afternoon in the yard of the parish at Lafayette. They displayed no fear of death. Ernest made a speech from the gallows in which he cautioned all bad boys to listen to the advice of their betters. He was sure his sins on earth were all due to bad books he was in the habit of reading. Alex, the younger brother, did not speak, as he agreed that his brother was to talk for both.
There were only 15 witnesses to the execution, the crowd of curious spectators being kept outside by a high fence, but they eagerly peered through every crack and crevice. The necks of both young men were broken, and they died instantly.
The crime for which the Blancos were hanged was the murder of Martin Bagnaud, on April 22, 1896, at Scott, a small town on the Southern Pacific road, about five miles from Lafayette.

The condemned men mounted the scaffold steps without a tremor. They made no statement. Vicar-General Fourchegu said the last prayer and in the most perfect and orderly manner the fatal drop followed. Only Patricio Valencia's body showed the least signs of life after the drop. He died of strangulation. The necks of the Borrego brothers and Alarid were broken. The bodies were cut down at 9:35 a. m. and at ten o'clock were placed in pine coffins and turned over to the families.

It was one of the best-equipped coal breakers in the Wyoming region, containing all the modern machinery, and its capacity was 1,600 tons per day. It will be a severe blow to this mining village, as the company employed nearly 800 men and boys, who will be thrown out of employment for many months. CAPITAL GOSSIP.

The President Will Leave the Office Seekers to Ruminate for a Few Days.—The Retirement of Maj.-Gen. Ruger.—Secretary Gage Determined to Have Some Time for Business—Palmer Back in the Printing Office.

NEW YORK, April 3.—A Sun special from Washington says: The president has decided to flee from the office seekers, and next week he will enjoy a brief vacation by taking a trip on the Dolphin, now lying idle at the navy yard. The trip will last for two or three days only. The destination of the president and his party, which will include a few personal friends, has not been disclosed.

This will be the first vacation Maj. McKinley has taken in almost a year. Ever since his nomination at St. Louis and until he came to Washington he was obliged to stick close to his home, and although he tried several times to get a few days' vacation, it seemed absolutely impossible for him to abandon his work, except for a brief trip to Cleveland and another trip of a few days to Chicago after the campaign ended. His close friends, ever since election, have been advising him to take a vacation of a week or two weeks, but he has steadfastly refused. Recently they have renewed their entreaties, and he has finally consented to go away next week for a few days on the Dolphin. It is not known whether Mrs. McKinley will accompany the president or not.

FOR SELF-PROTECTION.

Will Guard Against the Importunity of Office Seekers.

WASHINGTON, April 3.—Secretary Gage has struck against the importunities of office seekers. Since he has been in office little opportunity has been given him to attend to office business. His room has been crowded early and late with people who want positions and those who had friends who are candidates. Yesterday morning the secretary had no opportunity to look into the affairs of the department before going to the cabinet meeting. Yesterday afternoon he took the bit in his teeth and issued this order: "Hereafter the secretary will receive visitors only between the hours of ten and one o'clock on days other than cabinet days. On cabinet days visitors will be received from nine until 10:30. No visitors will be received at other times except on urgent official business."

PALMER RESUMES CHARGE.

And Makes Some Changes in the Government Printing Office.

WASHINGTON, April 3.—Public Printer Palmer yesterday resumed charge of the government printing office after an absence of three years. He found a handsome bouquet of roses on his desk from the employees, all of whom were glad to see him back. He appointed H. W. Collins chief clerk, vice W. S. Waterbury.
Mr. Waterbury, as are all the employees of the department, was under the protection of the civil service law, but his appointment being a personal with the retiring public printer, he made arrangements to go into business elsewhere. Mr. Collins went into the government printing office as an apprentice over thirty years ago, and worked himself up through various grades of service. Mr. Palmer also appointed Capt. H. T. Brian, foreman of the office, which he has filled for many years.

SECRETARY GAGE'S POLICY.

Finds Expression in a Restoration of Former Employees of His Department.

WASHINGTON, April 3.—Another former employee of the treasury department, discharged under the last administration was reinstated by Secretary Gage. He is D. W. Harrington, of New York, who was dismissed from the service after serving 23 years. Mr. Harrington gets his old position of chief of the accounts division, and the incumbent, F. D. McDowell, who succeeded him, is transferred to the architecture office as a chief of division. The reinstatement of Mr. Harrington is in conformity with the policy of Secretary Gage with reference to veterans of the late war who were dropped from the rolls of the department.

POST OFFICE HEADSMAN.

Fourth Assistant Postmaster General Bristow Getting to Work.

WASHINGTON, April 3.—Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Bristow yesterday made his first appointments of fourth-class postmasters. His predecessor, Mr. Maxwell, did not appoint anyone for the last month, which left Mr. Bristow about 2,500 places to fill, caused by deaths and resignations of incumbents.
Yesterday 38 were appointed, and out this number four were to fill vacancies caused by removal.

DUN'S COMMERCIAL REVIEW.

Failures for the First Three Months of the Year.—The Markets are Still Walling, with Prices Fluctuating, Some Sagging, Downward and Others Recovering.—The Market for Products Variable and Uncertain—Iron and Steel.

NEW YORK, April 3.—R. G. Dun & Co., in their weekly review of trade today say:

Failures reported to-day for the first quarter of 1897 number 4,992, against 4,081 last year, with liabilities of $48,007,911, against $57,425,135 last year.

The markets are still waiting, some sagging downward and others recovering. There is much disposition to use the decision of the supreme court against railroad combinations as an instrument for depressing stocks, and yet buying has prevented a decline exceeding $1 per share, and for trust stocks 20 cents per share.

The reports of railroad earnings for the quarter have been somewhat encouraging, the aggregate having been on roads within the United States only $2.2 per cent. smaller than last year, and the March returns have been rather more favorable than those for January or February.

Murdered and Thrown Into a Lake.

The body of a woman was found floating in the lake at St. Charles, La., near the Southern Pacific trestle. It was discovered near the shore by two fishermen, who at once notified the authorities. At the coroner's inquest the body was identified as that of Mrs. Faylette, who, with her husband, suddenly disappeared some time ago. Wounds about the head show that she was first murdered with some blunt instrument and then thrown into the water. The husband is supposed to have committed the crime, as he had been in the habit of treating her in a brutal manner. He was last seen the day after his wife's disappearance, making off to the swamp with a bundle under his arm. He is a member of Brotherhood of Railway Engineers.

Eleventh Man Killed.

A flash of lightning killed Frank Dent, the eleventh man in a row of convicts, at Waynesboro, Ga. The batch of eleven convicts were working in a field late in the evening when a storm came up. The guard strung the gang upon a long chain and hustled them toward a tree. Dent was at one end of the chain, while the other end was made fast about the tree, thus securing the crowd. A bright flash came, and in an instant the tree was in splinters. The flash blinded the gang, and long before the sulphuric smell passed away the convicts awoke from the shock to find Dent, on whom the current stopped, dead, and two others badly burned.

Constable Killed by a Fugitive.

Three negroes from Vinehill spent a day in Selma, Ala., in search of Lem Barnes, wanted in Autauga county for larceny. At 12 o'clock at night, in company with two policemen, they succeeded in locating their man in a cabin on the outskirts of the city. George Peoples, a colored constable, entered the house and demanded the surrender of Barnes, when the fugitive from justice shot a hole through the top of the officer's head, who fell with his brains oozing out and died without uttering a word. The murderer made his escape in the dark.

Gen. W. R. Terry.

Gen. W. R. Terry, a former commander of the Confederate soldiers' home at Richmond, Va., died at his home near Richmond recently. Gen. Terry was paralyzed about ten years ago, and his death is supposed to be the result of that attack. He commanded a brigade in Pickett's division, and was in charge of that command at Cemetery Ridge at Gettysburg. He was at one time superintendent of the penitentiary, served in the state senate, and was universally popular. Deceased was about 70.

Out of Employment and Despondent.

James Pope, a mechanic, formerly a stage hand at the opera house in Birmingham, Ala., shot himself through the head. He left a note addressed to "Dear Mother," in which he said: "I am going to Heaven or elsewhere to-night. Good-by. I will meet you in Heaven." He had been out of employment for some time, and, being despondent, went to a hotel, secured a room, and, undressing, shot himself through the head.

Gen. Peyton Wise.

Gen. Peyton Wise died at Richmond, Va., the other day. Gen. Peyton Wise was the son of John Wise, of Virginia, and a nephew of ex-Gov. Henry A. Wise, who figured so conspicuously in the conviction of John Brown.

Herts to an Estate in Holland.

COLUMBIANA, APRIL 8, 1897.

OUR PUBLIC ROADS.

Having heard the public for some time complaining so bitterly of our present system of road working we esteem it our duty to urge upon those who are required by law to look after these matters, the importance of taking immediate steps to remedy this great detriment to our county's welfare. To prove that it is a detriment is an easy matter for we have only to cite those counties of our state, for example, which have realized the great importance of good roads and have made them. Compare, if you please, their conditions. Look, for instance, at the farmer, he who is benefited most by such improvement; note his vast superiority to the farmer of our county. By means of good roads he can convey his produce to market, first, much more rapidly, second, with much less strain upon his stock, and third, with much less cost. In the first place, by being able to travel so much more rapidly the time saved alone will fully repay the cost to any one individual. In the second place, whereas we force our stock to do heavy pulling in order to transport our produce; with good roads they can carry double the load, with much less strain and in the third place the saving in the wear of conveyances will doubly repay for every dollar invested.

This far we have simply dealt with the benefits to the farmer alone, but it is not a fact that he alone receives benefit for it advances every branch of industry. It improves our markets, it stimulates trade, it encourages manufacturers and in fact it increases every kind of business.

Now in the face of these facts can we sit quietly with folded hands and continue in the same old rut that has characterized our county from its infancy? No we feel fully assured that our commissioners, after being made to see how greatly we stand in our own light until we take some steps in this direction, will investigate this matter more thoroughly and form some plan at once to remedy this existing evil. Let every one who has the welfare of our county at heart continue to agitate this question until our people are thoroughly awakened to its importance and endeavor to remedy it.

It is thought by those in position to know that the Mississippi flood will be the greatest calamity of the nineteenth century. Heavy rains together with a heavy snow storm are adding daily to the already fearful condition and the river is now beyond hope of control. The amount of damage done is incalculable, yet it is believed the worst is yet to come. The governor of Mississippi has ordered an appropriation of $10,000 to relieve the present need of the stricken ones of his state, while congress has appropriated $350,000 for the strengthening of the levees. The condition of things is simply appalling, while to think of their becoming worse is beyond the flight of human imagination.

The promptness with which Congress passed an appropriation for the Mississippi flood sufferers is to be commended. At the same time, it seems that the proper time to take steps to restrain the floods is before the floods come. Hundreds of thousands of dollars will be expended in work upon the levees during the continuance of the present flood, and much of the work will melt away into the torrents. The probabilities are that half of the money would pay for twice as much effective defense work in times when the stage of the water is low. It would seem that the Mississippi levees are to a considerable extent in the category with the roof of the Arkansas settler's cabin.—Savannah News.

Atlanta has been greatly excited for the past few days over the marriage of Governor Atkinson's son to a Miss Bird, also of that city; the groom being only sixteen years of age and the bride fourteen. This youthful couple have been kept separated by their parents since their marriage until some plan for their mutual benefit could be settled upon.

A disastrous fire took place in Chattanooga last Saturday in which one entire block together with several other fine buildings were destroyed. Several persons were killed in their efforts to escape, and it is thought the damage to property will amount to fully a half million dollars.

An Atlanta firm has been awarded the contract of publishing the new code of Alabama for the sum of $12,000. This we believe to be wrong, whoever may be guilty. We believe firmly in patronizing home industries, then and not until then, can we expect prosperity at home.

We are rejoiced to be able to state that Hon. T. S. Plowman, who has been extremely ill for some days, is rapidly improving, and it is hoped will soon be fully recovered.

The Dingley tariff bill is now being freely discussed in the senate, and there are many changes being offered, but its passage is considered a certainty.

It is believed that the recent cold has not yet killed the fruit crop, but, it is certain, has greatly injured it.

The State Sunday School Convention meets in Tuscaloosa today and will convene three days.

STEEL MADE FROM PIG IRON.

The Mobile Register of April 3rd, has the following to say of the new discovery of converting iron into steel: "A despatch from Bellaire received here tonight stated that one of the greatest discoveries of the nineteenth century, which will revolutionize the steel industry in the United States, if not in the world, was tested in that city today before a committee composed of the leading iron and steel workers and experts of the country, says the Springfield (Ohio) correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. Test-made steel was made from common pig iron and pig scrap, treated by what is known as the Hastings new process, converting iron into steel, and cast into sand molds. Four years ago John B. Hastings solved the problem and today the Bellaire Edge Tool Casting Company is manufacturing tools out of iron treated by this process with wonderful success. It expects to place upon the markets of the world all articles made from high grade steel. Tools upon which tests were made by the committee were made from the cheapest pig iron and old scrap. The process for treating this iron is very simple, but its effects are very great, as is clearly shown. The iron is treated in a ladle from the cupola and run into sand molds, then tempered to a degree of hardness as the case may require for usage. By this process the steel is positively anti-friction, which fact alone is one of much importance to the great railroad systems of the country. It means a saving of many thousands of dollars to them alone in the manufacture of journals, brake shoes, tools, etc., as they can be made at much less expense, while their durability is far greater than those now in use. One great feature of this process of treating the iron is iron uniform in temper, no matter how great or how small the cast may be.

A CURRENCY COMMISSION.

From the New York Evening Post.

Congressman Heatwole, of Minnesota, has introduced a resolution to provide for a currency and banking commission to be composed of four citizens eminent in trade, political economy and banking, to be appointed by the president, two senators to be appointed by the vice-president, two representatives to be appointed by the speaker, and the comptroller of the currency. Of the nine members five will be in official and four in private life. This is substantially the plan proposed by the Indianapolis conference, and is in accord with one of the suggestions of the president's inaugural address. It is very desirable that such a commission get to work early enough to have its report ready for the next regular session of congress, so that its plan may be acted upon one way or the other before the congressional elections of 1898. Of course much will depend upon the view taken by Speaker Reed as to the expediency of such a commission, but it is not likely that he will oppose any bona fide attempt to bring new light upon the currency question, which is all that Mr. Heatwole's resolution proposes. Whether congress shall follow the advice of such a commission will be an after consideration. One thing is certain, that a do-nothing policy rushes the country upon another presidential campaign like the last one, with the results even more doubtful; and as we approach it the business of the country will be thrown into shadow as by an approaching eclipse. Every man who has a dollar to lose feels the chill even now, and, is turning over in his mind plans and methods for meeting the possible catastrophe. It is idle to expect any real prosperity with such an outlook for investors of capital.

New York Business Men on Dingleyism.

From the New York Evening Post.

The resolutions adopted by the chamber of commerce against the Dingley tariff bill derive great significance from the fact that a majority of the members are republicans and protectionists, and that the body as a whole is extremely conservative. We believe that this is the first time in the history of the chamber that it has ever spoken against any pending tariff measure. When a body of this character declares that the Dingley bill is "excessive and likely to invite reaction harmful to business and to the best interests of the country, and that it should be carefully revised in the direction of a reduction of the rates of duty proposed, to the end that a system of tariff taxation may be adopted that shall be reasonably permanent, and that shall insure to the business interests of the country a certain measure of immunity from early change," it may be affirmed that the business community is profoundly stirred. The point most strongly insisted upon by the report which accompanies the resolution, is that such a tariff as this cannot be considered permanent, and that it will only be provocative of an early reaction, "rendering all business calculations and enterprise uncertain and hazardous." Strange to say, this view of the new and excessive duties on wool has begun to express the wool growers on the Pacific coast. The Portland Oregonian of March 24 has two columns of interviews with wool-growers and dealers in its own state deprecating such excessive duties and declaring that in their opinion no such tariff can remain long on the statute book.

They say that they would rather have a duty of 8 cents on clothing wool with the prospect of permanence than 11 cents with the prospect of an early reduction or repeal.

THE COUNTY PAPER.

The following from the Huntsville News-Dispatch gives a splendid description of the Chronicle: "The mission of a county paper, as we conceive it, is for the betterment of the moral, intellectual and material interests of the people of the county. It should encourage the improvement of schools, the building of churches and the beautifying of homes. It should advocate a proper enforcement of the laws and seek to stimulate the rising generation to take pride in good citizenship. There should be no demagoguery about the paper. It should advocate no cause, however popular, which it did not sincerely believe was for the interest of the county. It should make allowance for an honest difference of opinion and attack no man's motives merely because he differs from it in judgment. It should seek to allay prejudice and encourage a spirit of neighborly friendship between the citizens of the various parts of the county. Its columns should be clean, free from offensive personalities and nothing should be printed which parents would hesitate to read aloud around their fireside in the hearing of their boys and girls. It should present in condensed form in each week's issue an account of the events of national importance which have taken place all over the world since the last issue, for the benefit of its readers who do not get the daily papers. All this requires time, labor and expenditure of money. The people should show their appreciation by taking the paper and paying for it. They can help get out a good paper by sending in to the editor the local happenings of their respective neighborhoods as they occur each week.

ALABAMA AT NASHVILLE.

To the Press of Alabama:

Knowing from past experience that the enlightened and public-spirited newspaper men of Alabama are always more than willing to serve the state, I do not hesitate to address this open letter to them in behalf of securing a creditable exhibit of Alabama's matchless resources at the coming Tennessee Centennial exposition. The commission from Alabama, appointed by the governor, has already accomplished much in this direction, but the matter has not been adequately advertised so as to secure the fullest measure of co-operation from the public in the way of individual exhibits.

Having only a meager appropriation from the state the commission cannot pay for this advertising, but appeals to the state press to come to its aid in this respect. It is only a short time before this great exposition will be opened. Agitate the matter frequently in your columns, and urge those who have charge of the mining, manufacturing and agricultural interests of your respective sections to unite in getting together appropriate county or city exhibits of local resources and enterprises. Individuals who have exhibits of industrial or historic interest should be asked to correspond at once with me, so as to have the same properly displayed in the general state exhibit of the Nashville exposition.

The press is a great power, and I trust that each Alabama editor will patriotically respond to this demand upon their public spirit. If they will the result will be of great and lasting good to our beloved state.

THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER PROBLEM.

From the Selma Journal.

The problem of protecting the magnificent Mississippi Valley from floods is still an unsolved one. The all levee system, that is the attempt to confine the mighty stream in one channel by elevating the banks artificially has been tried for many years and has as often proved futile, causing the destruction of untold millions of property, besides the expenditure of many millions by the government to keep up the levee system. The "Father of Waters" is a rebellious stream, and a mighty rebel that laughs at ordinary barriers to hold him within his bounds, like a high jumping mule would laugh at a four rail horse lot fence.

There are two theories regarding the control of the Mississippi river. One, the levee system to confine it to single channel, the other the outlet system so as to give the waters a freer chance to get away by several channels. A wise combination of both systems may perhaps aid in a practical solution of the problem. There is one thing however, absolutely settled at present, the levee system alone is a disastrous failure.

THE NEW SOUTH.

The revival of business activity is more marked in the south, since the new year opened, than in any other part of the country, save, possibly, New York City. This is particularly noticeable in the southeastern part of the section—in Alabama, Georgia, South and North Carolina. So well did this part of the land weather the financial storms that began in 1893, that timid capital is again seeking investment there, and the confidence thus displayed goes on adding to itself on the principle that nothing succeeds like success. New industrial enterprises are starting, and old ones are being reinvigorated, while an influx of immigrants from the northwest and west and from the old country gives a life to the sunny south that it has not enjoyed since the boom times of 1880-1890.—Cincinnati Post.

THE SOUTHERN RAILWAY'S EXHIBIT AT THE TENNESSEE CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Arrangements have been perfected by which the Southern Railway's territory will be represented at the exposition which opens at Nashville on May 1. This, like former exhibits made by that company, will include sample specimens of mineral, agricultural, forest and other products of the states of Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, East Tennessee and Kentucky. This company's exhibit at the Atlanta and Pittsburgh Expositions attracted the attention of the agriculturist, manufacturer, miner, stock-raiser and others, and did more to educate the visitors to an appreciation of the great wealth and possibilities of the South than any other exhibit that was shown, and it is the policy of the company to actively continue this method of advertising. The scenic beauties of the country through which the Southern Railway runs will not be neglected in this exhibit.

Practically, this exhibit will be a bureau of information, so that visitors from the North and abroad can obtain specific data relative to all branches of industry in and tributary to the vast number of points on the Southern Railway.

This exhibit is under the direction of the Land and Industrial Department of the Southern Railway with headquarters at Washington, D. C., and persons located along that system having exhibit material that they think will interest the public and thereby help advance the best interest of the section from which it comes, should at once communicate with the agent of that department.

This is an exhibit in which every citizen of this section should be interested, and we hope that some of our readers can supply something to represent our territory.

Paper Tires For Bicycles.

The writer has visited the experimental shop of the parties who are working out the idea of making tires from paper for bicycles. A pressure equal to 120 pounds was brought to bear upon a rubber tire wheel in the presence of the writer, and the tire sunk in at the bottom. Then the same kind of a wheel was tread in the same way as regards pressure, but the tire was made of paper. The same weight did not cause the tire to sink in so much as in the case of the rubber one. Thus the paper tire can be run over cobblestones, sandy roads, mud, etc., and be less affected. The continual squeezing together and inflating of the rubber tire has a tendency to wear the rubber and cause a fracture. The paper tire, being less liable to flatten or sink in, is not subject to this wear.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

Danger in Postage Stamps.

One of the newest diseases is the "postage stamp tongue." The credit of discovering it is due to a London physician. It appears that the mucilage itself is injurious, and that, further, it is an excellent cultivating medium for germs of the worst character. In the allment called "postage stamp tongue" the latter becomes sore and covered with red spots. A bad sore throat is likely to follow if great care is not taken. Apart from the specific disease of the tongue, any contagious disease may be acquired through the medium of mucilage. Never lick a postage stamp with your tongue, say the physicians. It shows a great lack of cleanliness and hygienic knowledge.

Mrs. A. Invein, residing at 720 Henry St., Alton, Ill., suffered with sciatic rheumatism for over eight months. She doctored for it nearly the whole of this time, using various remedies recommended by friends, and was treated by the physicians, but received no relief. She then used one and a half bottles of Chamberlain's Pain Balm, which effected a complete cure. This is published at her request, as she wants others similarly afflicted to know what cured her. A Tasteless Cup.

A medicine glass has been invented with a partition in the middle, by means of which disagreeable tasting medicine is separated from some flavored liquid or wine which bates the lips and mouth before the dose is swallowed.—Popular Science News.

Two years ago R. J. Warren, a druggist at Pleasant Brook, N. Y., bought a small supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He sums up the result as follows: "At that time the goods were unknown in this section; today Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is a household word." It is the same in hundreds of communities. Wherever the good qualities of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy become known the people will have nothing else. For sale by J. E. Seale & Co., Druggists.

Harpersville Echoes.

The rain continues.

Health reigns supreme.

Oh no! "Pat," there was not any moss on that bucket which fell in the well at Vincent, for you know that it was a very shallow bucket, and moss don't grow on shallow buckets.

W. B. Hubbard, who has been in the store here with Mr. Martin for the past two years or more, has seen fit to leave Harpersville. We wish him success wherever he may go.

G. W. Thompson did actually kill a turkey gobbler one morning last week, and it was a wild one too, and weighed about thirty pounds. Judging from its teeth, if it had any, it was about four years old this spring.

Rev. Mr. Walker, of Talladega, preached in the Presbyterian church here last Sunday, according to announcement, but the congregation was small on account of the rain. This was the first services held in the church in seven or eight years, but we understand that they are making an effort to have regular preaching from now on.

J. E. Stone, of Talladega, who is in the insurance business, was in our community last week soliciting patronage.

There was quite a number of our people went down to Crosswell Sunday evening to see the wreckage.

JAKE.

Americans are the most inventive people on earth. To them have been issued nearly 600,000 patents, or more than one-third of all the patents issued in the world. No discovery of modern years has been of greater benefit to mankind than Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, or has done more to relieve pain and suffering. J. W. Vaughn, Oakton, Ky., says: "I have used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy in my family for several years, and find it to be the best medicine I ever used for cramps in the stomach and bowels. PETE.

The Rev. W. H. Weaver, pastor of the U. B. Church, Dillsburg, Pa., recognizes the value of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and does not hesitate to tell others about it. CURRENT TOPICS.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF.

FIFTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

(Special Session.)

THE senate was not in session on the 6th. In the house Mr. Chandler (rep., N. H.), introduced a bill "abolishing competition in trade and production and authorizing combinations to enable merchants, manufacturers and producers of commodities subject to interstate commerce to maintain prices and profits notwithstanding business depression," which he said he would press as an amendment to the railroad pooling bill, should the latter be brought forward. A resolution protesting against the trial of Gen. Ruis Rivera by drum-head court-martial was adopted by a vote of 40 yeas, 40 nays, 0.

In the senate, on the 6th, the morning hour was devoted to a heated discussion of the Cuban question, the subject being Mr. Morgan's resolution declaring that a state of war exists in Cuba and recognizing both parties as belligerents, which lost its place on the calendar. Most of the day was given to consideration of the bankruptcy bill. The house was not in session.

In the senate, on the 7th, consideration of the Cuban question and the passage of the relief of flood sufferers divided the time of the session. The reading of the president's message urging relief was followed by the passage of a joint resolution appropriating $100,000 to be immediately available. Later this action was rescinded, and house resolution appropriating $200,000 was passed unanimously. The senate then went into executive session. In the house the president's message was promptly acted upon, and a joint resolution authorizing the secretary of war to expend $200,000 for the relief of the flood sufferers of the United States was adopted. The house adjourned until the 10th.

In the senate, on the 8th, Mr. Morgan (dem., Ala.) spoke for the third successive day on his resolution declaring that a state of war exists in Cuba. Mr. Nelson (minn.) spoke for two hours on the bankruptcy bill, opposing the pending Torrey bill. Mr. Chandler offered a resolution, which was agreed to, that the committee on interstate commerce be directed to investigate the payments made or agreed to be made by the interstate commerce commission for attorneys' fees, etc. Mr. Thurston (rep., Neb.) gave notice on the 13th he would address the senate on the subject of the Pacific railroad debt settlement. The house was not in session.

THE WATERY WASTE.

The Situation in the Flooded District at Least No Worse.

Confidence in the Levees Growing, But the Chances of Making a Crop After the Flood Subside Disappointing—A Cry of Distress.

The Situation in the Flooded District No Worse.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., April 9.—Notwithstanding the high winds and heavy rainstorm reported from the overflowed Mississippi delta, last night, the situation in the flood-stricken section, if not better, is certainly no worse to-night. The water which has been pouring through five big crevasses for more than a week is rapidly flowing into the Mississippi again at a point 12 miles north of Vicksburg, and is sweeping southward with terrible force. The strain on the Louisiana levees will be something terrific for a week, and if they withstand the pressure for that length of time all will be well.

The Sunflower river, which traverses the counties of Coahoma, in Mississippi, is on a rampage to-night. Two-thirds of the water from the Flower lake crevasse is rushing pell-mell into this stream, and a large area will be inundated from the overflow. The Tallahatchie and Coldwater rivers are gradually falling.

At Helena the river is slowly falling, and indications are that the big streams will continue to decline. The backwaters below the Arkansas midland levees are on a stand to-night. The number of refugees is increasing at Helena almost every hour. The steamer Maud arrived there late this afternoon with more than a hundred flood sufferers, swelling the list already there to 3,000 people.

At Rosedale nothing of special interest has occurred in the situation. After a stormy night that caused buildings to rock and sway like boughs of trees, the sun came out bright and clear in that section to-day, but a cold north wind is blowing. In the Bogue Phalia country much suffering is reported. Members of the Rosedale relief committee will visit that section to-morrow and distribute provisions to the needy.

At Greenville the situation has not changed. All the levees along the Mississippi front satisfactorily withstood the terrible wind of last night.

At Memphis the river continues to fall. A decline of one-tenth of a foot is reported by the weather bureau to-night. The railroads, with one exception, are again open for business, and in good shape and all trains are being run on schedule time. Many dispatches from Memphis have stated that the Iron Mountain was the only line entering the city from the west side. This is erroneous. The Cotton Belt railway has been open during the high water in Arkansas, dispatching its trains promptly and regularly. By raising the tracks in the vicinity of Bird's Point, opposite Cairo, the road had an uninterrupted service to and from St. Louis.

Confidence in the Levee, but Little Chance of Making a Crop.

VICKSBURG, Miss., April 9.—Information from all points on the Louisiana side and the Arkansas state line down to the lower end of the district, is that while the high winds have done considerable damage no serious results followed last night's storm along the entire front line of the levee banks that are now put to such a severe strain by the waters coming out of the Yazoo. Lieutenant Newcomer, with headquarters in Memphis, United States engineer in charge of this, the third district, which extends from the mouth of the White river down to Warren, ten miles below this city, telegraphs to Capt. Brown, his assistant in charge, that more money is available. If necessary and to do everything possible to hold the levee and to prevent overflows.

Col. Newcomer had previously placed $10,000 to the credit of the emergency fund here. This gives ample funds for the high water fight that is now on.

President Maxwell stated yesterday that the line in danger extends from Henderson, 30 miles above Vicksburg, to Warren, ten miles below. This territory is being closely watched, and large forces are at work raising the low lines and strengthening the weak places.

At the Bedford-Biggs levee, ten miles below, in Louisiana, the work is well under way, and two days more, it is thought, will put it out of immediate danger. At Cabin Tell, in Upper Madison parish, there was some wave-wash damage last night, but it was all repaired to-day.

The Surget-Ashley run-around, built to protect a caving bank in Concordia parish, was completed yesterday. Mr. Maxwell also stated that he has no fears of the Tennessee levees, as they are all five feet above highest water. This line runs from Bedford down to St. Joseph, a distance of about fifty miles.

Capt. Long, a well-known levee contractor, was in the city to-day, and states that he rode over the line yesterday from Ashwood, La., down to Hard Times Landing, a distance of 22 miles, and that the levees could stand six feet more water. Mr. Maxwell states that if the levees hold until the flood passes Vicksburg he will feel comparatively safe.

Information from the delta is that Deer creek and Sunflower are rising rapidly and are flooding all lands adjoining. The damage done in the overflowed section is almost beyond estimate. Experience in past years is evidence that no corn can be raised on overflowed lands of the season and not an average crop of cotton.

Mr. S. P. Metzger, president of the Cotton exchange of this city, well informed and a close observer, gives it as his opinion that the loss to the receipts of cotton by the overflow in the states of Arkansas and Mississippi this season will not fall short of 350,000 bales and possibly greater. The Yazoo delta will not, if the water goes out by the first of June, make half a crop.

United States Assistant Engineer, W. S. Brown arrived on the steamer Vidette from above at 6 p. m. and reports all safe.

The First Cry of Distress from Flood Sufferers.

JACKSON, Miss., April 9.—The Associated Press reporter at Greenville, the seat of the district, telegraphs at 1 p. m. as follows: The first cry of distress from the flood sufferers of the Mississippi valley was sent out yesterday by the citizens of Greenville when they appealed to the government for supplies to feed 40,000 people in this county alone. This morning's appeal means that the colored people in Washington county at least have thrown up the sponge, and have but little hope, if any, of making crops this year. This was addressed to Congressman Catchings and Gov. McLaurin, and asked for $125,000 for immediate use to ration those who will soon be left destitute.

Reports from the Sunflower and Tallahatchie river bottoms bring tidings of the waters every moment. At Clarksdale, Coahoma county, the water rose 30 feet last night and was still rising at the rate of six inches an hour.

A wind storm which prevailed all last night caused fresh alarm on the river front and the levee guards were stationed all along the line of levees here. The river is still stationary at a mark higher than ever before, and there is no prospect of relief. The Western Union and Southern telephone wires from here are down and there is no communication over these routes. Skiffs and yaws and rafts are making trips daily into the interior with food and general plantation supplies.

THE MACHINERY IN ORDER.

For Promptly Executing the Government's Plans of Relief.

WASHINGTON, April 10.—The machinery provided by the war department for the relief of sufferers from the Mississippi river floods is now in working order and Secretary Alger said to-day that by Saturday morning the department would be in a position to cover the entire flooded district with its force of inspectors. The officers already detailed to this service have started for the west, and before leaving Washington they received orders assigning them to different sections of the great river.

Maj. Craig, signal corps, is ordered to proceed to New Orleans to consult with Maj. G. M. Derby, the engineer officer in charge of that section, and then proceed to Red river landings, investigating the condition and needs of the people as he proceeds. His orders are to report the results of his investigation to Secretary Alger, who will use this, in conjunction with the similar reports from other officers, as a basis for the distribution of the relief stores.

Capt. Charles H. Clark, of the ordnance department, is ordered to Vicksburg, there to consult with Maj. J. H. Willard, the station engineer, after which he will also proceed to Red river landings on a tour of investigation. He, like his brother officers, engaged in this duty, is instructed to confer fully with all of the local relief committee on his route.

First-Lieut. A. S. Rowan, Nineteenth infantry, goes to Memphis, to confer there with Capt. Fitch of the engineer corps. Thence he starts on a tour of the river between Helena, Ark., and Greenville, Miss.

Maj. Sanger, inspector general, also goes to Memphis, but after talking over the conditions there with Capt. Fitch, he will take as his route the river from Memphis to Helena.

Capt. Martin, assistant quartermaster, will go first to Vicksburg and hear from Maj. Willard, the engineer officer stationed there. His section of the river will extend from Vicksburg to Greenville.

Second-Lieut. H. M. Whitney, Fourth artillery, takes section six of the river, from Cairo up. He will first report to Capt. Fitch at Memphis.

The abatement of the flood on the Red River of the North has caused the rescinding of the order already issued to another officer to proceed to that section.

Secretary Alger received to-day the following telegram from Major J. A. Johnson, of Fargo, N. D., where the flood had been reported as raging.

"Fargo is grateful for offered assistance. Water subsiding fast. Our people are in no need of the assistance tendered. Damage greatly exaggerated."

All the boats of the lighthouse establishment in Mississippi have been turned over to the war department for relief work, so have the boats of the Mississippi River commission, and Secretary Alger says that if these are not sufficient, he will charter as many more of the river craft as may be necessary.

SEED DISTRIBUTION.

Secretary Wilson Has Initiated a New System in His Department.

WASHINGTON, April 10.—Secretary of Agriculture Wilson has initiated a new system of seed distribution in his department. His aim is to diversify, so far as possible, the farm products of the country, and to this end he is making a specialty of selecting new and valuable seeds from all parts of the world and putting them in the hands of farmers likely to use them to advantage.

He has begun the work with sugar-beets and leguminous plants of all sorts. While sugar-beets are now widely cultivated in the west, the best seed at present comes from abroad. A large supply of these high grade seeds has been ordered and will be judiciously distributed.

Poughkeepsie Glass Works Burned.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., April 10.—The Poughkeepsie glass works were completely destroyed by fire. Only part of the factory that the firemen were able to save was the office and some sheds, under which new goods were stored. The loss approximates about $100,000; insurance, $90,000.

ON PATSALAGY RIDGE.

When Rufus Sanders and His Best Girl Turned Out.

"Busted a Big Campmeetin with Fine Clothes and Fancy Trimmings"—But "Remained Over"—Till Show Was Out.

It is the gonebyest most strangest thing in this round created world to me what a tremendous big lot of devilment one mortal man can do single-handed and alone under the sun. The meanness which vain and fleetin man does is more than probable to live after him, whilst the good deeds done and the whisky he drinks is sometimes buried with his bones.

Raley and truly, I didn't mean to do it, but onest upon a time—in my young and magnolious days—when I was feelin in my feed and gallin around right plentiful and promiscious like—I busted up a whole campmeetin. And onest upon another time I busted up the biggest sort of a weddin match, when I wouldn't of done it a-purpose for the finest young mule in the settlement.

Who Should and Who Shouldn't.

That was years and years ago, before me and mother ever took up a notion to walk together in the ten commandments and work in double harness for better or for worse. It was way down in the old Panther Creek settlement, where the Sanders generation of people had made their clearings and built their cabins in the first settlement of the country.

Campmeetings was all the go in them good old days, and indurin that particular summer everybody—Methodists, Baptists and all—went in kersnoons together and got up one of the biggest campmeetings you ever heard tell of. They struck camp in a big shady grove over on Patsalagy ridge, and the people they come for miles and miles around—come in wagons and on horseback and afoot—till it did look to me like everybody was there.

Now in that day and generation most everybody had to live at home and board at the same place. They made their meat and bread and raiments at home, and even to the highest striver of the land most in generally wore homespun. I was one of them, and I wore a heavy gold watch chain. I wouldn't give a darn for no watch, Uncle Eph, but I might as well need the chain in my business."

"He Fetched the Fixments."

Now, in them plain old days we didn't have the railroads and telegrams to make quick trips on, and it was nearly two weeks before Uncle Eph returned back home. But when he did come he fetched the fixments with him. It was then along in the first part of August and the camp meetin was comin off about the middle of September. I managed some way to slip the riggins we had got for Miss Susy Ann over to her house, and she had plenty time enough to set up of nights and put them together unbeknownce to the old folks. The plan was for both of us to bud and bloom and bust out sudden and surprisin like and take all the shine off of Dunk and Miss Rosebud the very first lick.

The big camp meetin opened up on a Sunday. We didn't have many buggies then, and when the young people went about they had to ride horseback, or either take it afoot and walk. I was to give the old folks time to get off to meetin and then ride by my Miss Susy Ann. And I do wish in my soul that you could of seen me when I got into my new clothes and come out in full bloom that Sunday mornin. My navy blue coat had a velvet collar and brass buttons on it. It was not only a calf-wiper, friends and fellow cilkens—it was a double-breasted anklenkicker. And that bell-crown hat which I wore. My, my, my! It was a vind splitter and a sky scraper. Then with my ruffe-bosom skirt and spike-toed boots on, and a heavy gold watch chain danglin from the brow band of my breeches—daddabme it, I felt like I wouldn't give more than half of the road to a governor or a president.

When I got over there to the Stringer place Miss Susy Ann's house was standin in hiteh to the rack in front of the gate. I rid up and hailed with a grand salute. Presently here come Miss Susy Ann skippin and fluttrin out of the house. Man, sir, there was a sight which was worth livin a long life time to see. Her pink silk dress was put together and built up accordin to the latest fashions, with tucks and dounces, and laces and ribbons and beads and white throat to her high-heel slippers. It didn't raley seem to me like she was walkin human fashion, but sorter skinnin over the earth like a bird, and blamed if her riggins didn't scream and whistle as she went like a high wind in a canebrake. I helped her to mount, and away we went till we rid into the camp grounds with a wide sweep and a mighty swash.

The "Terrible Confusionment."

But then, when we marched hand in hand through the crowd and up under the big bresh arbor, we did raise the daddabland fluttrin and fluttrin that had ever come to pass in all that skirt of the woods. The show was wide open then and the gonebyest most terriblest confusionment you ever read about was goin on around there presently. The preacher had jest got into a weavin way with a powerful and stirrin sermon, but he had to give it up and turn loose to catch his breath. On the first flush some of the people thought I must be Gen. George Washington, or King Jecus, or some other royal monarechy, with a queen for a wife by his side.

So consequently I fixed the triggers that night, and bright and early next mornin I went to work settin up the traps.

Old man Eph Simpkins was then way yonder the most richest man in the settlement. He kept store over at the Cross Roads—owned two or three good plantations, and, accordin to common talk, he was plum lousy with money.

So in the next place I went over to see Uncle Eph that day, laid all my plans and schemes before him, and asked him if he wouldn't stand by me till I could wean Bunk Weatherford, or either make him sick on the milk.

"You see that horse, bridle and saddle, Uncle Eph?" says I. "Well, they are mine and paid for. How much money would you say I have got buckled up there together?"

"I would put the figger at $150," says he.

"When are you goin down to New Orleans to lay in your fall stock, Uncle Eph?" says I.

"I loved to start for the river landin to-morrow," says he.

"Well now, Uncle Eph," says I, comin right down to business, "when you git to New Orleans I want you to spend $150 for me—spend it exactly like I tell you—and then take a waverly note on that horse, bridle and saddle to make your money dead safe."

"I will let you have the money, Rufe," says Uncle Eph, "or I will spend it for you and spend it exactly like you say, providin you will give me all the pints of your game as you go on with it—providin you will let me be there at the milkin and the weanin."

"You are traded with on the spot," says I, "and now, Uncle Eph, let me tell you how to spend the money. In the first outset I want you to git the finest and prittiest dress that money can buy for Miss Susy Ann—no poker dots, no muslin and no calico, Uncle Eph, but the finest of silks and satins—somethin that will rustle and whistle at every step she takes. And don't go and git no pale and sober and serious lookin colors, Uncle Eph, but pink and red and yaller buff—somethin gay and gorgeous-like and flashy. Then buy her the finest hat and the shiniest slippers you can find, and fling in plenty of ribbons and laces for trimmings and good measure."

"Then for my own riggins, I want a navy blue broadcloth suit of clothes, calfskin, spike-toed boots and a bell-crown silk hat, which the same like our congressman wears when he ain't out huntin for votes. And I don't want no save-all, high-water coat, neither let it be a double-breasted calf-wiper, Uncle Eph. Then I want a ruffe-bosom shirt, and if the pile ain't clean gone by then you can fetch me a heavy gold watch chain. I wouldn't give a darn for no watch, Uncle Eph, but I might as well need the chain in my business."

RETURNING PROSPERITY.

It is an indisputable fact that the business outlook of the South is brightening almost daily, notwithstanding some sections have suffered so horribly by the recent flood. We note improvement and increase of confidence in almost every branch of industry, but, especially in the iron markets, that which helps our own state most. Southern iron is in great demand. Three furnaces in our immediate section, which have been closed down for months, were a few days since put into full blast. The Shelby Iron Company have shipped more iron in the past few weeks than for several months previous, and will in all likelihood put both their furnaces in operation in the near future. A shipment of 1,000 tons of iron from Birmingham to Genoa was reported a few days since. Thus we are bound to admit that confidence among the moneyed men of our country is rapidly being restored, and can such industries be operated among us without greatly helping us? Does it not, of necessity, put a considerable amount of money into circulation, of which every industrious person can receive his pro rata share? Although many are still crying hard times and earnestly contending that our country, especially the south, is getting in a worse condition every day, still, we don't think so and believe if they investigate more thoroughly, they too, will change their minds. Even should it be so that our condition is becoming critical, as they predict, it cannot be bettered by sitting down and crying "hard times" and abusing the republican administration. The way, and the only way, to succeed in anything is by eternal vigilance. So, let us take courage and put forth all our energies in honest channels and success will be inevitable.

Madison county established its prosperity by building the very finest system of free pikes several years ago. Colbert county has immortalized itself by voting almost unanimously to issue $100,000 worth of bonds to build a system of free pikes. Limestone is agitating the question of doing likewise. There is nothing more calculated to make a prosperous country people than good roads. A prosperous country people make prosperous cities. Huntsville Tribune.

Would that Shelby county would follow suit and make itself one of the leading counties of the state. There is nothing that would encourage and stimulate business more than would good roads.

The State Sunday School Convention which convened at Tuscaloosa last week was a grand success in all respects and every one who attended returned to their homes with a determination to do more toward the advancement of this noble work in the future. Two thousand dollars was subscribed by members of the convention for the carrying on of the Sunday school work during the next twelve months.

A national figure and a great man passed from the field of action Saturday morning when Daniel W. Voorhees, of Indiana, breathed his last. He was a true and tried democrat and had labored long in the ranks of this party, never flinching from any duty imposed upon him. In his death Indiana loses a good man and the country at large a noble statesman.

The Medical Society of Talladega county gave a banquet on last Tuesday at the Southern Hotel in Talladega which is said to have been one of the most brilliant affairs that place has had in many years. The medical profession in that county seem to be "up to snuff" in every respect. Our M. D.'s should take notice.

The reports from the flooded districts are becoming slightly encouraging at last. At some points the water is slowly falling but it is impossible yet to tell whether the flood is at an end; it is hoped, however that the worst is past and that the situation will surely improve within the next few days.

It is reported that seventeen guests of the Hotel Knox, of Knoxville, which was burned last week, are missing and thought to have perished in the flames. This fire was one of the worst that has occurred in the United States for sometime, the total loss being $1,611,000.

All the buildings are about completed at the Nashville Exposition grounds and it is thought everything will be in readiness for the opening. This exposition will undoubtedly be the largest ever held in America with the single exception of the World's fair.

On last Wednesday contracts were let in Birmingham for the building of the extension of the Mobile & Ohio railroad between Montgomery and Tuscaloosa. The contractors hope to fully complete the road by the first of next year.

Democratic victories were the results of all the municipal elections throughout the country which proves that men are again regaining their reason. In 1930 the republicans will want to know "where they are at."

An exchange says: "There is nothing too big for the Atlanta police to tackle. They have just jalled a man named Mountain."

War now seems a certainty between Greece and Turkey.

RECENT MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS.

From the Galveston News.

The municipal elections in Ohio, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin and Indiana this week resulted, as a rule, favorably to the democrats. It cannot be denied that local issues figured somewhat potently in several instances, but making due allowances for the light vote polled in most instances and for local influences, there is still in the result some significance of national import. In some instances it was stated that the gold and silver democrats worked together, and it is likely that this was the case to some extent in all instances. There is little doubt that the radical protection policy of the McKinley administration has a tendency to do for the democratic party what it can not do for itself, namely, to draw together its hostile factions. It is apparently the case that the republican leaders do not understand the great mass of democratic people, or rather that they misunderstood them. Because a few democratic officeholders yield their tariff reform scruples for a little protection to influential interests here and there does not signify that the rank and file of the party have even thought of taking a backward step in the matter of low tariff; nor have the gold democrats consented irrevocably to swap the devil of free silver for the witch of tariff spoliation. The 1,000,000, or more democrats who voted for McKinley were repeatedly assured by republican leaders that there would be no extreme tariff legislation, but that the currency would be reformed if possible. Instead, there has been "jammed" through the house the extreme protection measure ever considered by the American congress, and the obligation to at least attempt currency reform has apparently been forgotten. Under these circumstances it is not surprising that the gold democrats should be displeased, and there is no doubt that many of them availed themselves of the opportunity afforded by the municipal elections to give expression to their disapproval. The administration perhaps hopes to clinch its protection policy by inviting a campaign on the money question next year, expecting again to obtain the assistance of the sound money democrats. Vain, foolish hope. The Dingy bill once on the statutes seals its own fate and the fate of the party that espouses it. The tidal wave next year will convince Mr. McKinley for a second time that the country is opposed to his scheme of bleeding the producers and consumers of the country for the benefit of the few. McKinley and his party seem to be unequal to the task of rising to a great and rarely opulent opportunity.

WELL DONE.

From the Chattanooga Times.

Cleveland's cabinet officers seem to be getting on and putting things in place, quite naturally. Carlisle has already found a thumping law practice, one that rivals, in point of profits, the business of the oldest and most famous firms of the country. It is asserted, by those familiar with his affairs, that the great lawyer and financier will realize $100,000 in fees in his first year at the bar. His clients are such firms as J. Pierpont Morgan and Co. He picks and chooses his cases, taking none that are not to his liking.

Secretary of War Dan Lamont is to be president of the Northern Pacific railroad, a place worth at least $25,000 a year, perhaps more.

Postmaster General Wilson has stepped into the shoes of the learned son of the great southern chieftain, whose place the son took as president of Washington-Lee College of Virginia. Secretary Herbert has under consideration two excellent offers; and this closes the list of those who were open to employment. Norton has his magnificent Nebraska farm; Harmon and Olney resume their lucrative professional business; Bissell returns to his big concern in St. Louis; Bissell retired some months ago, to take up his law practice in Buffalo.

These eminent citizens will not be disturbed by the vicious howling of the press at their heels. They are conscious of a record in office that is without blot or stain. They understand that honorable and influential editors are their friends; and that they command the confidence and respect of the best Americans. What should they care if they have the experience of being slandered that attends all successful men? They are too wise to take them seriously, if indeed they give a passing contemptuous recognition of the existence of those who pursue and traduce them.

THE RIVER PROBLEM.

The Mississippi river presents a problem not yet solved. It runs on a ridge, and is liable at any time to burst its banks and deluge the surrounding country. Its channel is gradually filling up, and the bottom of the river is in some places higher than the surrounding country. The bed of the St. Francis river, thirty miles west of the Mississippi, is ten feet lower than the bed of the Mississippi. The fall from Baton Rouge to New Orleans, 200 miles, is only two-tenths of a foot. The mouth of the Mississippi is higher than its source. The water would not flow at all if it were not pushed on by the mass of water behind. The river is continually shortening itself by cut-offs. The distance by river from New Orleans to Cairo is 200 miles less than 100 years ago. A scientist might be able to demonstrate that Cairo and New Orleans will soon be brought together. The New Orleans people claim that the present flood has deepened the channel of the river opposite the city some ten feet.

WONDERFUL THINGS THAT ARE NEAR.

The Philadelphia Press foreshadows the coming of the millennium as follows:

Flying is solved. The principle is known. A mechanical expedient is all that is now needed to make it successful. Practical flight is today not more than five or ten year off.

A glow worm makes light without one three-hundredth part of the force used in ordinary artificial light. When men know how to make light as cheap, streets and homes will be as light as day for a mere fraction of what light now costs. This is near. Vacuum illumination without incandescence is already in full operation, and in a year or two should cut down the price of light to a sixth of its current cost, and in five or ten years light may be, like water, turned on in every house at will.

Compressed air has long been known to be the best way, theoretically, to store force for use in transportation. There is no waste and no deterioration. The need is a cheap and efficient motor to apply compressed air to city transportation. If this can be done, first the trolley poles and wires will come down, next the horseless, compressed air motor carriage will do all the work of city delivery.

When these come the only use for gas will be for cooking—if this is not done by electricity. Factories, also, before many years, will be run by transmitted electric power. This has begun to be done and in five or ten years will be completed, and the factory fire and boiler will be a thing of the past.

The city of the future, and no very distant future, will have no trolley poles or wires and no horses. All movements will be on rail by silent air motors or by horseless carriages equally silent. All pavements will be asphalt. Unlimited light will be as cheap as unlimited water is today. No coal will be delivered at private houses and no ashes taken from them. With no horses, no coal and no ashes, street dust and dirt will be reduced to a minimum. With no factory fires and no kitchen or furnace fires, the air will be as pure in the city as in the country. Trees will have a chance; houses be warmed and lighted as easily and cheaply as they are now supplied with water.

A city will be a pretty nice place to live in when the first twenty years of the twentieth century are passed.

SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIANS.

From the Augusta Herald.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian church of the South meets at Charlotte, N. C., on May 20th. The most important question that will come up before the assembly will be the action on a possible reunion of the Presbyterian church in the North and South.

Commissioners from the Presbytery of Louisville have the matter in hand and will present a report looking to such action by the Southern General Assembly. It is said that the Northern Church has been ready for such a reunion for several years. Difficulties, however, growing out of the war have become so cemented that it is thought they will keep the churches apart indefinitely.

There are very interesting theological questions that may also serve to keep apart the different branches of this church. The Southern Church is far more conservative than the Northern. Many of the leaders in the church in the North have gone a long way off from the doctrines and ritual practiced and believed in for the most part in the South. It will be hard to reconcile these differences in a united church.

Another matter that will come up before the convention will be the organization of colored presbyteries. It is said the main reason for this is a motive of good for the colored people though some of the church people profess to see in the motive various other reasons.

The Uniontown Herald says: "It is useless for a man to want for better times before applying himself diligently to work. Better times may never come—in fact, we never expect to see the flush times which prevailed fifteen or twenty years ago. The times have come when people must apply themselves, in order to succeed, and we believe such times have come to stay. The flush times spoken about were caused by a readjustment and re-establishment after everything was destroyed by the war. Now that matters have become settled, there are very few chances to make a fortune accidentally, for prices range steadily, and people must hustle to make progress. Such being the case, let each and every one abandon the idea of prosperous times to come, and trustingly solely in the powers within himself, let every one work diligently. The country will then be well off, and based on a solid foundation, and if we don't have prosperity, we will have its twin sisters, which are success and competence."

One who has been keeping tab on the conduct and chances of the boys writes as follows: "Every boy and young man in town is spotted, and, when vacancies occur in offices and other positions of responsibility they do not go to those who hang around public places, nor to those who put in their time smoking cigarettes and aping the style of dudes and mashers, but to the lad who has a clean record for industry, sobriety and honesty; to one who is anxious to do all in his power for his employer. A straight, clean, manly boy never has to hunt very long for a job. He is always wanted."—Guntersville Democrat.

THE SOUTHERN RAILWAY'S EXHIBIT AT THE TENNESSEE CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Arrangements have been perfected by which the Southern Railway's territory will be represented at the exposition which opens at Nashville on May 1. This, like former exhibits made by that company, will include sample specimens of mineral, agricultural, forest and other products of the states of Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, East Tennessee and Kentucky. This company's exhibit at the Atlanta and Pittsburgh Expositions attracted the attention of the agriculturist, manufacturer, miner, stock-raiser and others, and did more to educate the visitors to an appreciation of the great wealth and possibilities of the South than any other one exhibit that was shown, and it is the policy of the company to actively continue this method of advertising. The scenic beauties of the country through which the Southern Railway runs will not be neglected in this exhibit.

Practically, this exhibit will be a bureau of information, so that visitors from the North and abroad can obtain specific data relative to all branches of industry in and tributary to the vast number of points on the Southern Railway.

This exhibit is under the direction of the Land and Industrial Department of the Southern Railway with headquarters at Washington, D. C., and persons located along that system having exhibit material that they think will interest the public and thereby help advance the best interest of the section from which it comes, should at once communicate with the agent of that department.

This is an exhibit in which every citizen of this section should be interested, and we hope that some of our readers can supply something to represent our territory.

Some Water Uses Well to Remember.

The Phrenological Journal gives the following useful hints on the applications of water in severe attacks of illness. The adult members of a family should keep them in mind for an emergency.

A strip of flannel or a soft napkin, folded lengthwise and dipped in hot water and wrung out, and then applied around the neck of a child that has the croup, will usually bring relief in a few minutes.

A proper towel folded several times, and dipped in hot water, quickly wrung and applied over the site of toothache or neuralgia, will generally afford prompt relief.

This treatment, continued a few months, with the addition of a cup of hot water slowly sipped half an hour before each meal, with proper attention to diet, will cure most cases of dyspepsia.

Ordinary headaches almost always yield to the simultaneous application of hot water to the feet and back of the neck.

Capture of a Scapegoat.

A certain Sunday school head teacher was much worried by the noise of the scholars in the room next to him.

At last, unable to bear it any longer he mounted a chair and looked over the partition dividing the two rooms to see who the offenders were.

Seeing one boy a little taller than the others talking a great deal, he leaned over, seized the boy by the collar, lifted him over the partition and banged him into a chair in his room, saying:

"Now be quiet."
He then resumed his lesson, until about a quarter of an hour later, when a small head appeared at his door, and a meek little voice said:

"Please, sir, you've got our teacher!"

Americans are the most inventive people on earth. To them have been issued nearly 600,000 patents, or more than one-third of all the patents issued in the world. No discovery of modern years has been of greater benefit to mankind than Chamberlain's Cough, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, or has done more to relieve pain and suffering. J. W. Vaughn, Oakton, Ky., says: "I have used Chamberlain's Cough, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy in my family for several years, and find it to be the best medicine I ever used for cramps in the stomach and bowels. For sale by J. E. Seale & Co. Druggists.

Cure For Ink.

From the Chicago Record.

A medical man tells how an old negro woman called him in to treat a little child.

"Doctah," she said, "de child hab swallowed a pint ob ink."

"Have you done anything to relieve him?" asked the doctor.

"Yes," replied the mother, "Ise made him eat free sheets of blotting paper, doctah. Was dat right?"—Chicago Record.

Two years ago R. J. Warren, a druggist at Pleasant Brook, N. Y., bought a small supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He sums up the result as follows: "At that time the goods were unknown in this section; today Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is a household word." It is the same in hundreds of communities. Wherever the good qualities of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy become known the people will have nothing else. For sale by J. E. Seale & Co., Druggists.

Hicks, the prophet (so-called), says: the year 1897 is to be one of remarkable happenings and mishappenings. There will be storms, cyclones, cataclysms, earthquakes and tidal waves. There will be wars and rebellions, murders, epidemics and famines; kings, emperors and presidents will be assassinated; there will be conspiracies and intrigues in high places; there will be failures and thefts and piracies, and if the world does not come to an end it will not be the fault of stars.

These pills are easy in action and are particularly effective in the cure of Constipation and Sick Headache. For Malaria and Liver troubles they have been proved invaluable. They are guaranteed to be perfectly free from every deleterious substance and to be purely vegetable. They do not weaken by their action, but by giving tone to stomach and bowels greatly invigorate the system. Regular size 25c per box. Sold by Parker & Armstrong, druggists.

Bread From Sawdust.

In times of famine bread has been baked from wood, bran or sawdust. This wood bread is made by selecting the sawdust of the least resinous wood—the beech, for example—and adding a little flour, some yeast and some water. When baked, it resembles in ordinary appearance and taste the common brown bread of the bakers.

The Rev. W. H. Weaver, pastor of the U. B. Church, Dillsburg, Pa., recognizes the value of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and does not hesitate to tell others about it. "I have used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy," he says, "and find it an excellent medicine for colds, coughs and hoarseness." So does everyone who gives it a trial. Sold by J. E. Seale & Co., Druggists.

This great blood purifier and nerve tonic, cures diseases by removing from the system, the conditions which produce them. It expels all poison and impurity from the blood. Our illustrated book of 48 pages will tell you what is the matter and what to do. Its free for the asking. Quart bottle, $1.00.

Portraits in Dust.

The most remarkable portrait in the world is owned by a New Yorker. It is a photograph of a man, and is composed of fine particles of dust deposited on a pane of glass. It is not the handiwork of man. It is a natural phenomenon. It formed itself out of the flying dust of the atmosphere which adhered to the glass in varying thicknesses until a perfect likeness of a living human being was produced. It required eight years for completion, yet so delicate is it that all this wonderful production of nature may be wiped away and totally obliterated by the simple rubbing of the finger tip. Many theories have been advanced explaining the cause of the formation. Several leading scientists have concluded that it was caused by atmospheric electricity generated by the action of the sun rays shining against an old portrait.

Wine in Paper.

The biggest item of incidental loss in ocean traffic during the stormy seasons of the year is that of breakage in the wine stores. No matter how securely the bottles are fixed in the bins, a particularly heavy sea striking the ship in a certain spot, or continued rolling and pitching, will cause great loss in costly wines that were never intended to wash the floor or the walls. A French firm is going to do away with this old-time source of annoyance and complaint. After years of experimenting it has succeeded in manufacturing a paper bottle which will not break, and which has the advantages of the ordinary glass bottle. In the home, too, such bottles would be highly appreciated.

CARTER H. HARRISON was formally installed as mayor of Chicago on the 15th.

BRUTALLY MURDERED.

A Cashier's Heroic Struggle in Defense of His Charge.

Killed by Determined Robbers, Who Then Loot the Vault and Make Their Escape—The Whole Community Aroused and in Pursuit.

SOMERSWORTH, N. H., April 17.—While resisting the entry of two desperate and determined robbers, and during a heroic, but futile, struggle to protect $150,000 or more in money and securities, in the compartments of the open vault of the Great Falls national bank of Somersworth, yesterday afternoon, Cashier Joseph A. Stickney was struck down and brutally murdered near the desk which he had occupied for years. After killing Stickney, the murderers ransacked the vault and fled with all the cash it contained with the exception of a five dollar gold piece. As near as can be estimated, about $6,000 was taken, but it is possible that the amount will considerably exceed this sum, as no one but the dead cashier knew the exact amount that was in the institution at the time.

The robbers, after knocking Stickney down with a blackjack, cut his throat. The most remarkable feature of the robbery is the fact that $100,000 in bonds of the United States, which were kept in one of the drawers of the big vault, and which the robbers evidently examined hastily, were not taken. Neither was any of the negotiable paper and securities of the bank—in fact, nothing is missing except the cash.

No one was aware that there was anything wrong at the bank until two o'clock, or an hour after the murderous evening scores of deputy sheriffs, marshals, police and citizens were scouring this section of the state and the adjoining state of Maine, which from this city is just across the Salmon Falls river.

The men made their visit to the bank at the busiest time of the day in the locality, which the bank is situated and so completely and thoroughly did they accomplish the robbery that only an uncertain clew and a very meager description of them was obtainable.

The bank was besieged by hundreds when the news of the terrible affair became known, and large numbers of people came here from surrounding cities. Had the robbers been apprehended soon after the murder and robbery became public, it would have been found difficult to prevent a lynching in the Granite state. Great sympathy is expressed for the family of the murdered cashier, who, in addition to his position as cashier and director of the Great Falls bank, was town treasurer.

It has always been customary for Cashier Stickney and Bank Clerk Mrs. Parker Swazey to close the bank at noon and not reopen it until two o'clock. Mrs. Swazey left her desk at noon. The cashier, however, remained looking over the bank's accounts, and it is thought he was preparing to go out when the robbers entered.

The first suspicion that the bank had been robbed was at 1:35 o'clock when Mr. Frank P. Reed went up the staircase of the bank building and found the thick plate glass in the front outside or hall door of the bank completely shattered. He notified City Marshal Eaton, and they broke in the door and found evidences of a desperate struggle.

On the floor, in a great pool of blood, was the lifeless body of Stickney. His head had been nearly severed from the body, the robbers having cut his throat. The head was marked with several deep gashes made by a heavy blackjack, and the skull was fractured. The body was covered with blood, and the walls and furniture bore additional evidence of the terrible deed. Stickney had died fighting desperately.

The first clew that the officers found was from persons who reported seeing a man burying up the hill carrying a bag heavily weighted over his shoulder. He threw the bag behind a stone wall, changed some of his clothes and finally got into a buggy driven by another man. Other persons reported seeing the buggy, and in West Rochester a horse and buggy were seen headed for Salmon Falls river, which forms the main state boundary.

This outfit has mysteriously disappeared despite the fact that the whole section hereabouts is being searched to-night. There were undoubtedly two men concerned in the affair. The outside door had been locked by Mr. Stickney after Mrs. Swazey's departure, and when the robbers found they could not open it they smashed the plate glass which formed the upper half of it. The men then crawled through the hole made in the door. The inside door, which led into the apartment behind the counter, was fastened by a heavy iron bar. Marks have been found showing that one of the men had endeavored to raise the iron bar and Cashier Stickney endeavored to keep the bar in its place. The robber was too much for the cashier, for the door was forced. It was then that the cashier made his last stand, and after a short but heroic struggle, was killed.

Mr. Stickney's family consisted of his wife, a son and two daughters. He was wealthy and well-known in New England banking circles.

BANK CASHIER TAYLOR

Returns and Voluntarily Submits to Arrest—A Preliminary Hearing.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., April 17.—George A. Taylor, the former cashier of the defunct Argentine bank, who mysteriously disappeared a month ago, returned home Thursday, and yesterday voluntarily submitted to arrest on a warrant charging illegal banking.

Taylor was arraigned yesterday afternoon and given a preliminary hearing. Friends went his bond. The warrant for Taylor's arrest was sworn out by a former depositor.

BATTLING THE FLOOD.

Heroic Work in the Face of Discouragement. The Most Desperate Situation Yet Encountered—Fifty Miles of Levee Actually in Danger of Being Overtopped by Water—Hundreds of Persons Rescued.

VICKSBURG, Miss., April 17.—The situation along the Louisiana levees across the river for fifty miles above and below this city dwarfs every other feature of the flood problem into temporary insignificance. The rise shows no diminution and the levees are actually in danger of being overtopped by the water now pouring out of the Yazoo basin, in a sheet 25 miles wide, for a distance of ten miles opposite this city.

In spite of the evident danger and of the repeated warnings of the weather bureau, very few persons are removing stock to the high lands, though all are taking other precautions. One hundred head of mules were brought to this city Friday from Sparta plantation, in Louisiana, ten miles above here. The belief prevails that the levees are weak, and the fear that they cannot be raised enough to keep an acre of a flood that is piling over four inches of water daily on a river already at 52 4-10 feet on the gauge.

In spite of those conditions the levee forces are battling doggedly against the flood night and day. It is the finest example of human energy and constancy of heart to be seen at this moment on the planet.

The Work of Relief is Going On systematically. Some of the negro refugees are finding employment in the uplands, a few having gone as far as Illinois county, and here and there a planter's overflowed plantation is heard of who has removed his people to the hills, determined to make a cotton crop there and to plant his home place in corn when the water falls.

Capt. M. C. Martin, having completed his inspection of flood conditions between Greenville and Vicksburg, left for Washington last evening to report verbally to the secretary of war. The local efforts to afford relief to the people temporarily exiled from their homes are being successfully directed, to all appearance, and few would suspect such a number of them were gathered here. They are scattered all over the city, in colonies, so to speak, are in good condition and not at all depressed by the situation.

Capt. Charles H. Clark, U. S. A., arrived yesterday and will remain a few days.

One of Secretary Alger's Agents Returns to Washington.

WASHINGTON, April 17.—Sanger, of the inspector-general's corps, arrived in Washington yesterday. He is the first of the officers sent out by Secretary Alger to the flooded districts to return to this city. He explained verbally to Secretary Alger just what had been done by him and under his instructions to ascertain the condition of the flood sufferers and arrange for their relief.

Major Sanger's district lies in the Mississippi valley from Memphis down to Helena.

Chartering a steamer at Memphis, with the best captain that could be found, a man who the major said was of the greatest help and willing to go anywhere to relieve distress, he took aboard two weeks' supplies of a character suggested by the Memphis committee and started down the river, accompanied by Col. Rogers, chairman of the Arkansas levee board. It was found that the Memphis people had already established stations for the relief of the refugees in many places throughout the St. Francis district in addition to the big camp they had pitched in West Memphis.

All of these were visited and, in addition, Maj. Sanger established stations at other points where they seemed to be needed. The relief boat ran up the St. Francis river and up the L'Ange river and across country over cotton fields and farms in every direction, where it was supposed people were to be found in need of help, acting largely upon advice of the local relief committees along the route.

Returning to the main river a visit was made to the Flower lake crevasse, which was found to have extended to a width of 1,800 feet. Maj. Sanger says that in the country overflowed from this break some of the richest cotton land in the south is under water from two to 25 feet.

More stations were established, negroes were sent out in canoes throughout the flooded districts to notify the people where they might come. Maj. Sanger says the inhabitants of the flooded section are bearing their affliction with extraordinary patience, clinging closely to their half-submerged cabins and undergoing hardships in the hope of better times. He says that if the waters recede by the 20th of May all will be well with them, and that, with economy and careful distribution, the funds already appropriated will be sufficient for the maintenance of the absolutely destitute. But if the water holds up, and it is impossible to make a crop this summer, the distress that will result will be terrible.

A Bad Break at Biggs.

VICKSBURG, Miss., April 16.—The levee at Biggs, 2½ miles below Delta, La., broke at 10 o'clock to-night. The crevasse was 120 feet wide 20 minutes after it gave way. Delta is directly opposite Vicksburg.

Rescue Work—Three Hundred Persons Saved.

NATCHEZ, Miss., April 16.—The gauge notes a rise for the past 24 hours of .40. Above and below here the levees will not stand any more water. This is the statement of Capt. Thomas Rober of the steamer Joseph, engaged in rescue work near Vicksburg. The following telegram was received from him:

"Rescued from Lovell's place, 139 persons who would have gone under. To-day brought in 300. Will return by Lake Palmyra and continue the rescue late to-night. The levees will not stand further pressure—must go."

DUN'S COMMERCIAL REVIEW.

The Undeclared War Between Greece and Turkey Responsible for Business Changes—It Affects the Grain Markets Much and Stocks Slightly—Comparative Statement of Exports and Imports—Cotton and the Great Flood.

NEW YORK, April 17.—R. G. Dun & Co., in their weekly review of trade to-day say:

An undeclared war between Greece and Turkey has been more responsible than any other single cause for changes in business this week. Actual fighting, with facts which seem to make a formal declaration of war by Turkey inevitable, has affected grain markets much and stocks slightly.

The progress of the Mississippi floods does not change the price of cotton, and settlement of the more important labor difficulties has revived works suspended last week. The temporary decrease in exports and large increase in imports at New York 20.8 per cent. for the month-caused questions about the financial future which have not much influence as yet. The increase in imports $9,000,000, or over 100 per cent. from last year and $17,100,000, or 28.9 per cent. from February, if long continued may embarrass some branches of business, but can hardly exhaust balances remaining from the unprecedented excess of merchandise exports, $323,881,519 in nine months ending with March.

The wheat market, after its decline of six cents last week, was prepared to rise with prospects of European war and increased purchases for export, and has risen 4.37 cents since last Friday. Exports for the week are very small, and for two weeks but little greater than last year, while corn exports continue over three times last year's, and for two weeks 6,022,015 bushels against 1,963,193 last year, the price advancing less than one per cent. Western receipts of wheat are larger for the week, and the government reports indicate a considerably larger yield than that of 1896, which has sufficed to meet an extraordinary demand.

Cotton has scarcely changed during the week of unprecedented floods, though this year's crop will be materially diminished unless the water soon subsides. But there are numerous indications in other parts of the south of increased acreage.

The output of pig iron increases, though 15 furnaces stopped in March, as others with larger capacity started, and the weekly production April 1 was 173,279 tons, against 169,986 last year. While 29 per cent. below the greatest ever known, the output is 50 per cent. larger than October 1, and stocks unsold increased scarcely any, though the largest on record.

The demand for nails and wire continues heavy and in spite of large transactions in the past in agricultural work and rails is still fair, while there is much doing in machinery for export to Russia, Japan and South Africa. But bars and most other finished products are in narrow demand and bessemer pig is lower at $9.90 or less at Pittsburgh, with gray forge $8.60 there and only $5.75 at Birmingham. Delay in making contracts for Lake Erie retards demand for products, but hard ore has begun to sell at $2.40 for Chapin. Tin plate makers have agreed upon $3.50 for full-weight bessemer, against $3.90 for foreign.

Lead is unchanged at $3.35 and copper at 11½. The great sale of 19,000 pieces of cotton goods was considered satisfactory, as prices averaged but 2 to 8 per cent. below the current market, and a better general demand is expected.

Print cloths sell slowly without change. Woolen mills are doing a little more, though much machinery is idle and there is scarcely any buying of qualities recently advanced. Speculation in wool turns largely to foreign, and imports of 45,114 bales the past week, and 15,246 the previous week at Boston alone, have not prevented higher quotations for the better grades of domestic. Sales at the three chief markets were 9,006,000 pounds.

Failures for the week have been 207 in the United States, against 222 last year, and 30 in Canada against 36 last year.

ANNUAL ALLOTMENT.

Funds Appropriated by Congress for the Naval Militia of the States.

WASHINGTON, April 17.—The secretary of the navy has made the annual allotment of the fund of $50,000 appropriated by congress for the naval militia of the states. Deducting $3,000 reserved for the purchase of text books, the remainder of the appropriation is allotted among the states having naval militia organizations in proportion to the number of uniformed petty officers and men they had on their rolls on the 1st of January last. The result is as follows:

STATE	No of Petty Officers and men.	Allotment.
Massachusetts	434	$5,065
Rhode Island	138	2,048
Connecticut	135	1,710
New York	367	4,757
New Jersey	337	4,388
Pennsylvania	183	2,372

South Carolina	163	1,814
North Carolina	140	1,818
Georgia	188	2,436
Louisiana	209	2,726
Illinois	335	4,40

COLUMBIANA, APRIL 22, 1897.

FEARFUL CONDITION OF OUR CEMETERY.

This is a subject that has been much discussed for years but never anything definite decided upon, and now we deem it an opportune time to take some action at once towards improving it. To say that the present condition of our cemetery is a disgrace to the citizens of Columbiana is stating it mildly, for it does seem that this place, of all places, should be dear to our hearts; that we would feel the most sublime reverence and respect for it and that we would take the greatest interest in doing everything possible toward beautifying and keeping it clean. We venture the assertion there is not a town the size of this in the state that has not a better cemetery; and does it not elicit many remarks detrimental to our town and its citizens? Does it not show a great want of respect to see it in such a fix, when, with such a small amount of labor it could be kept perfectly? We do not think our citizens have ever viewed this subject in its true light; yea we are sure they cannot be guilty of allowing such conditions to exist when they are fully aware of how fearfully disgraceful they are.

On one or two occasions in the past this matter has been called to the attention of the public and freely discussed but nothing definite ever accomplished save the building of a front fence and doing a little work on the inside. If you will just interest yourself enough in this matter to take a walk up there you will see that we are not over exaggerating the case, you will find graves greatly sunken in, tomb stones fallen flat upon the ground, or warped entirely out of position, undergrowth and briars growing profusely everywhere, the fences of private enclosures torn most to pieces, pallings off, posts rotting out of the ground and many other things of like nature for which we have not space to mention. Now can it be possible we are content to sit with folded hands and allow such an important matter to go totally neglected? No, surely this cannot be true for we are confident after this gentle reminder our true citizens, those who have the every interest of our town at heart, will bestir themselves at once and see that this disgrace is removed. We further believe there will not be the slightest difficulty in raising sufficient funds to defray this expense, for there are few ladies and gentlemen in our midst when shown this matter in its true light that will not rally to the support of the aggressors in this movement. Now let us see to it that this laudable undertaking is begun at once and prosecuted with untiring energy until fully completed, so that in future, instead of having a cemetery of which we are all ashamed, we will have one of which we all are justly proud.

The banquet of the Bryan Club, of Birmingham, in honor of the birthday of Thomas Jefferson which took place on last Tuesday night was a grand success in every particular; the main feature of the evening being an address by Governor Johnson, which elicited much comment. There being quite a number of other prominent men present they also added to the enjoyable feast by making short speeches and on the whole the affair was one of mirth and gladness from start to finish; just such an occasion as would be worthy of paying tribute and respect to such a grand old hero.

The fire in Anniston on last Wednesday night which greatly damaged the Smith building is one of the worst this city has had for many months. The Palace Shoe Store stock, which was one of the largest firms of the kind in the place was totally destroyed, while the stocks of several others were greatly injured. Most of these were great misfortunes, however, carried insurance, consequently their loss will not be very heavy.

Detectives of the Southern Express Company have succeeded in tracing the supposed robbers of the L. & N. train, near Calera, some weeks ago, up to Rome, Ga., but from there, have been unable to obtain the slightest clew as to their whereabouts although the most vigorous efforts are being put forth. It is earnestly hoped they will be captured and punished to the fullest extent of the law.

Some one has said that "if the country editor were to jump at all the great advertising snags held out to him he would soon be a millionaire. It is our opinion that if he ran a paper according to the popular notion he would soon be in the poor house. If he published half the items sent to him, he would be in jail half the time and in the hospital the other half."—Gantersville Democrat.

After reading the newspapers advocating the different sides of the money question one is forced to admit that the Brunswick Advertiser was correct when last Tuesday it said: "This is Thomas Jefferson's birthday, the father of more kinds of democracy, according to present claims, than any other man who ever lived."—Anniston Hot Blast.

On last Wednesday the Moresque block in New Orleans, which is considered one of the most picturesque business houses in the city, was totally destroyed by fire, the damage amounting to over $400,000.

EASTER.

Last Sunday being the great Easter festival, so largely celebrated over the christian world in commemoration of the resurrection of Christ. We thought the following description from the Selma Journal regarding its origin would be of interest to our readers: "It is interesting to note briefly the history and the progress of the Easter church feast."

It is the opinion of the best historians that there was a festival somewhat similar to Easter but of course having no connection whatever with the christian day that was of heathen origin whose teutonic name was for the Goddess Ostura. The Anglo-Saxon "Easter" was celebrated by the Saxons of old about the same season at which the festival occurs today.

In the ancient church the Easter celebrations lasted eight days. After the eleventh century it was limited to three, and at a later time to two days. At these periods the occasion was one of much rejoicing, it was a time especially for celebrating the rite of baptism; courts of justice were closed, alms dispensed to the poor and needy, and slaves received their freedom. The day was originally called "The Sunday of Joy," following as it did the austerities of Lent and there seems to be little doubt that the festival was in these early days perverted to excesses of worldly indulgence. The reformers of the sixteenth century raised their voices against these excesses and largely suppressed them, bringing the day to its present orderly observance, preceded by "passion week" commemorative of the crucifixion during which the solemn religious services were held.

The proper time for the observance of Easter as a church festival in commemoration of the resurrection caused much dispute among early christians, between the eastern and western churches. The eastern christian celebrated Easter on the 14th day after the Jewish month or moon, considering it equivalent to the Jewish Passover. The western churches celebrated it on the Sunday after the 14th day, holding that it was in commemoration of the resurrection.

The council of Nice, in A. D. 325, decided in favor of the western usage. This only decided however that the celebration should be on Sunday. The astronomical cycle for calculating the occurrence was not determined by this council. The Metonic cycle, named after the ancient Athenian astronomer, was already in use in the West and it was on this cycle that the Gregorian Calendar was introduced and arranged. This was the calendar adopted by order of Pope Gregory XIII by which the Julian calendar was modified by calling Oct. 5th 1582, Oct. 15, and continuing to count 10 days in advance. This calendar was adopted in England by an act of Parliament in 1751 and is now in use among all christian nations except Russia and Greece. The eastern festival being the most important of the christian movable feasts, determines the rest. It was in deference to the most ancient customs that the ecclesiastical authorities decided on the method of the determination of the festival by the moon. So the rule is that Easter comes on the first Sunday after the first full moon that occurs after the 21st of March, the time of the vernal equinox, called the paschal full moon, and hence it always comes between the 22nd of March and the 25th of April.

"DEAD" POLITICIANS.

From the Chattanooga Times.

A common expression concerning men who have to a degree been disappointed by public life and have disappointed their party is: "He's politically dead." Washington, Jefferson and Jackson were pronounced politically dead when they retired from activity. Jefferson betook him to his cloister at Monticello filled with disgust at his experience. So sick was he of his great office and the shabby treatment of party leaders that he was little more than a lay figure in the presidency in his last two years, but was he politically dead? No. The politicians of every questionable quality still hold his name one to conjure with. They celebrate his birthdays; they extol his patriotism; they loudly profess faith in Jeffersonian doctrine. Never get up a political funeral for a public man; history alone can do that, and history will disappoint the wishes and contradict the assertions of the smart gentry who are consigning such men as Cleveland, Olney and Bayard to the tomb. They are not only alive in their records, but very much alive in fact, and liable to make more record that will disturb and confound their enemies.

Reducing farming to a science and studying it as such is bound to pay as will be shown by the following sketch from the State Herald: "Intelligent farming in the main pays in the South. A farmer in Mecklenburg county, North Carolina, has 318 acres in his farm and from it his books show he has realized in one year, from the sale of milk, butter, calves, pork, pigs, corn, hay and wheat, $7,950.00. The expenses all told were $1,200.00, leaving the sum of $6,750.00 net profit, or an average of a fraction under $22.50 per acre. Of course if he had conducted his farm in a slipshod manner without definite plans and the utilization of everything at command, he could not have achieved this magnificent result. The lesson of this experience is that it will pay to conduct farming operations on business principles and in a business manner."

A steamer is being built in New York by Captain J. H. Plimly which he says will make a mile a minute. Should he succeed his efforts will be largely awarded.

"THE CONFEDERATE FLAG."

The following beautiful poem was composed and read by Mrs. D. Giraud Wright before the meeting of the "United Daughters of the Confederacy" at Baltimore a few days since, by which she has made her name immortal:

"THE CONFEDERATE FLAG."

"The hands of our women made it,
Baptized in our mother's tears
And drenched with the blood of our kindred
With hope for these four long years,
Across vale and plain we watched it,
While the tide of the battle rolled,
And with streaming eyes have followed
The Wave of each soft slaken fold.

"As high o'er our hosts it floated,
Through dust and din of the fight,
We could catch the glint of spear heads
And the flash of crimson light,
While the blood of men who bore it,
Flowed fast on the reddened plain,
And our eyes wept up in anguish,
To our God for our martyred slain.

"And we wept and watched and waited
By our lonely house of old fire,
For the mother gave her first-born
And the daughter gave her sire,
And the wife sent forth her husband,
The maiden her lover-sweet,
And hearts kept time in the silence
To the rhythmic tread of their feet.

"As they marched o'er vale and mountain
While our banner rose and fell,
Though victory often crowned it,
As the Northern hosts can tell,
But the whole world was against us,
Our battle we fought alone
Till the conquerors' Want and Famine—
Bade us lay our colors down.

"Cold are the loved hands that bore it,
Still are the brave hearts and true,
Watching our waiting can bring them,
Weeping is all we can bring them,
Light from our banner has faded,
We in its shadow forlorn,
Have only our memories left us,
And our battle flag drooping and torn.

"No hand of vandal shall touch it,
"Tis shrined in our heart of hearts
With dearest, holiest memories,
And the burning tear drop starts,
While laurel we weave and cypress
For the fair, the brave, the good,
The only stain on our banner
Is the stain of our heroes' blood."

"JEFFERSONIAN" DEMOCRACY.

From the Mobile Register.

The National Association of democratic clubs, in its meeting held in Washington Monday, set forth what it declares are the principles of Jefferson and the democratic party, as follows:

"The objects of this association as set forth in its constitution are these: "To foster the formation of permanent democratic clubs and societies throughout the United States and insure their active co-operation in disseminating Jeffersonian principles of government.

"To preserve the constitution of the United States, the authority of the states, local self-government and freedom of elections.

"To resist revolutionary changes and the centralization of power.

"To oppose the imposition of taxes beyond the necessities of government economically administered.

"To promote economy in all branches of the public service.

"To oppose unnecessary commercial restrictions for the benefit of the few at the expense of the many.

"To oppose class legislation, which despoils labor and builds up monopoly.

"To maintain inviolate the fundamental principle of democracy—equality before the law.

"To co-operate with the regular organization of the democratic party in support of democratic men and democratic measures."

"These are principles of Jefferson and of the democratic party, never surrendered or abandoned in any of the numerous and grave vicissitudes since the adoption of the constitution and the formation of political parties. They are essential as every intelligent citizen is aware, to the preservation of the republic and of the rights of the states and of the people. Their importance is self-evident and we do not propose any vindication or exposition of them."

THE GIRLS INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

From the Selma Times.

The Girls Industrial School has made remarkable progress in so short an existence. It was opened last October to the admissions of pupils, and now has within its walls 230 healthy, pretty, happy and industrious young ladies. Mr. Reynolds is to be congratulated on his successful efforts in establishing a first-class school where a young woman can get a useful education at rates within the reach of all.

A Times man passed Montevallo yesterday and from the car window obtained a splendid view of the school and grounds. The new dormitory building of brick, three stories high, is now being roofed and will soon be ready for occupancy, and the town is dotted with new business houses and residences, lumber and fresh paint being in evidence everywhere. The town deserves to prosper for its people made a gallant fight to get the school and since securing it have given it their hearty support in every way.

Success to the school and to the people of the town who have done so much for it.

Shelby Siftings.

News was never scarcer in the history of this place.

E. T. Witherby was off on business last week.

Postmaster McLane is in Saginaw for his health.

The blind preacher gave us two very good sermons at the Baptist church Sunday. The people contributed $7.00 to the furthering of his education.

Dr. Oliver is so much improved as to come up town occasionally.

The Company continues to ship some iron.

The Shelby Iron Company is using the old ball ground for corn this year—A very much more gentle, and profitable use than heretofore.

Sunday was an ideal day and new frocks were numerous. Regular Easter services were held on the Hill. The Sunday schools were unusually well attended.

Roy Christian came over from Birmingham Saturday night and returned Monday.

"We" have been exercising on the K. of P. goat lately.

John Mosley and Jim Walker have been sick a little lately, but the latter not from the same cause of the aforesaid.

Messrs. Averyt & Averyt are horse traders of the first order now. For particulars, bring some boot.

We learn that Mr. Bice is quite sick.

We are sorry that we can't go over to "Wilmington" to see the marriage, but guess we'll have to stay at home with "mur. and dem." We wish them good luck and if they don't believe in change then they can change it to "a series of delightful events."

Frank Kifer and Charley Kiel, after an inspection tour through Birmingham and Bessemer, returned a deal more satisfied with their old associations.

The weather is so inviting as to almost have us believe that there is true meaning in the songs "The old Plantation" and "Down on the Farm"—however, we can be found yet at the same stand.

THE SOUTHERN RAILWAY'S EXHIBIT AT THE TENNESSEE CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Arrangements have been perfected by which the Southern Railway's territory will be represented at the exposition which opens at Nashville on May 1. This, like former exhibits made by that company, will include sample specimens of mineral, agricultural, forest and other products of the states of Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, East Tennessee and Kentucky. This company's exhibit at the Atlanta and Pittsburg Expositions attracted the attention of the agriculturist, manufacturer, miner, stock-raiser and others, and did more to educate the visitors to an appreciation of the great wealth and possibilities of the South than any other exhibit that was shown, and it is the policy of the company to actively continue this method of advertising. The scenic beauties of the country through which the Southern Railway runs will not be neglected in this exhibit.

Practically, this exhibit will be a bureau of information, so that visitors from the North and abroad can obtain specific data relative to all branches of industry in and tributary to the vast number of points on the Southern Railway.

This exhibit is under the direction of the Land and Industrial Department of the Southern Railway with headquarters at Washington, D. C., and persons located along that system having exhibit material that they think will interest the public and thereby help advance the best interest of the section from which it comes, should at once communicate with the agent of that department.

This is an exhibit in which every citizen of this section should be interested, and we hope that some of our readers can supply something to represent our territory.

The people should learn the value of the pennies. What better illustration of the part they cut than the fact that the postal receipts of the United States Government are about $90,000,000. The great bulk of this comes from the sale of one and two cent stamps. The astonishing statement is made, but borne out by facts, that the difference of one mill per mile on freight carried by all railroads in the United States makes a difference in the revenue of $80,000,000. It is the careful watching of the tenth part of a cent that brings profit to the transportation companies, and it is no wonder that the holders of railway stocks are anxious for some legislation which will enable them to receive some return for their investment. The men who have been prosperous in business have been watchful of the pennies. Our southern people have not sufficiently adopted that policy. It is time they were getting at it.—Montgomery Advertiser.

Your Boy Won't Live a Month.

So Gilman Brown, of 24 Mill St., South Gardner, Mass., was told by the doctors. His son had lung trouble, following Typhoid Maleria, and he spent three hundred and seventy-five dollars with doctors who finally gave him up, saying: "Your son won't live a month." He tried Dr. King's New Discovery and a few bottles restored him to health and enabled him to go to work a perfectly well man. He says he owes his present good health to use of Dr. King's New Discovery, and knows it to be the best in the world for lung trouble. Trial Bottles Free at Parker & Armstrong's Drug Store.

high authority!

Dr. S. W. MITCHELL is authority for the statement that nervousness is the characteristic malady of the American nation, and statistics show that nerve deaths number one-fourth of all deaths recorded, the mortality being mainly among young people.

Johnston's Sarsaparilla

is the grand specific for this great American disease, because it goes straight to the source of the weakness, building up health and strength by supplying rich, abundant food and pure blood to the worn-out tissues, rousing the liver to activity and regulating all the organs of the body.

Novelties in Fishing Rods.

Fishing rods are now made especially for the use of bicyclists. They are jointed in such lengths that they can be carried in a cover suspended from the frame of a bicycle. At one end of the cover there is a pocket for the reel. Bicycle rods are made in both bait and fly.

The bicycle rod is practically a modification of the trunk rod which has been made and sold for many years. The trunk rod is made in such lengths that it can be carried in an ordinary sized trunk or a valise.

Mrs. A. Inveen, residing at 720 Henry St., Alton, Ill., suffered with sciatic rheumatism for over eight months. She doctored for it nearly the whole of this time, using various remedies recommended by friends, and was treated by the physicians, but received no relief. She then used one and a half bottles of Chamberlain's Pain Balm, which effected a complete cure. This is published at her request, as she wants others similarly afflicted to know what cured her. The 25 and 50 cent sizes for sale by J. E. Seale & Co., Druggists.

The longer I live the more I am satisfied of two things: First, that the truest lives are those that are cut rose-diamond fashion, with many facets answering to the many plain aspects of the world about them; secondly, that society is always trying in some way or other to grind us down to a single flat surface. It is hard work to resist this grinding down action.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

Two years ago R. J. Warren, a druggist at Pleasant Brook, N. Y., bought a small supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He sums up the result as follows: "At that time the goods were unknown in this section; today Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is a household word." It is the same in hundreds of communities. Wherever the good qualities of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy become known the people will have nothing else. For sale by J. E. Seale & Co., Druggists.

"Habit" is hard to overcome. If you take off the first letter, it does not change "a bit." If you take another, you still have a "bit" left. If you take off still another, the whole of "it" remains. If you take off another, it is not "it" totally used up. All of which goes to show that if you wish to get rid of a "habit" you must throw it off all together.—The Hub.

The Rev. W. H. Weaver, pastor of the U. B. Church, Dillsburg, Pa., recognizes the value of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and does not hesitate to tell others about it. "I have used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy," he says, "and find it an excellent medicine for colds, coughs and hoarseness." So does everyone who gives it a trial. Sold by J. E. Seale & Co., Druggists.

Messrs. Holcombe and Beandland, as will be seen by reference to their advertisement in another column, having leased the famous Talladega Springs are now endeavoring to make them the most pleasant as well as healthful summer resorts in the state. The water at these Springs has long been recognized the best for general diseases that can be obtained in the South, and to be able to obtain this and at the same time be situated in one of the prettiest places imaginable is certainly a grand privilege. These young gentlemen have spared no expense in improving and beautifying the place and now only ask as their reward your patronage.

The "egg hunt" on Saturday night at the residence of James Dykes was truly an enjoyable event, as is evidenced by the many expressions of that nature heard from all participants. Scarcely can be found a better hostess than Mrs. Dykes, and she spared no pains or trouble in making this occasion well worthy of praise. Mr. Dykes is also to be complimented for his geniality and cleverness, for which he is noted, and not having been long entered upon that blissful state in which he now basques he is still able to anticipate the wishes and tastes of happy lovers and knows how to arrange matters to suit them.

We are requested by the ladies of the Presbyterian church to announce that they will give an ice cream supper at the residence of Rev. W. I. Sianott on tomorrow (Friday) night and earnestly request all to be present. These ladies will endeavor, besides furnish all the cream necessary, to make it pleasant for all who attend, by appointing a committee whose duty it will be to entertain as pleasantly as possible every one there. Let all who feel an interest in the promotion of a good cause go out and lend their presence, as well as their money toward making this an occasion long to be remembered.

On last Sunday Rev. T. M. Wilson, encouraged by a large, intelligent audience, preached a logical and appreciative sermon, to which every one present gave the strictest attention. It being Easter, he chose for his subject "The Resurrection of Christ," which he dwelt upon in the most eloquent manner. The music, rendered mostly by a choir of young ladies and gentlemen assisted by Mr. J. R. White and wife, was grand and bespeaks much praise for all participating. After the sermon communion services were had of which most every one present partook, thus making the entire service beautifully solemn and impressive.

Quite a number of young gentlemen from Shelby came up Friday night last to attend the spelling match which they had heard was to be had that night, but, of course, were disappointed. They manifested great interest in endeavoring to find out where it would take place so they could be here. We hope those who are getting it up will let us know beforehand so we can announce it in the paper.

The Southern Railway depot at this place is much improved in appearance in consequence of a new coat of paint placed upon it last week. It is a good thing for Columbiana to have an attractive looking depot as the general aspect of the place about there gives travelers anything but a good opinion of our thrifty little city.

Rev. S. P. West, business manager of the Alabama Christian Advocate, was in the city Sunday and conducted services at the Methodist church Sunday night. On Monday he gave the town a thorough canvassing in behalf of his paper, and if energy and perseverance count for anything his efforts must have been crowned with much success. Mr. West also assures us that the Chattanooga to be held in Talladega will be, in his opinion, the best he has yet had; their being on the program some of the most noted lecturers that our country contains.

CURRENT TOPICS.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF.

FIFTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

(Special Session.)
In the senate, on the 19th, the Indian appropriation bill was passed substantially as it passed the house, save the amendment opening the Uncompahgre Indian reservation. Resolutions of inquiry were agreed to asking the secretary of state as to the operation of the reciprocity treaties made under the McKinley act. After an executive session the senate adjourned as a mark of respect to Representative Milliken, deceased. The house was not in session on the 19th.

In the senate, on the 20th, most of the morning hour was taken up by Mr. Morgan in further discussion of his resolution declaring that a state of war exists in Cuba, after which the agricultural appropriation bill was taken up and passed. After a brief executive session the bankruptcy bill was formally laid before the senate and Mr. Bacon (dem., Ga.) submitted numerous amendments modifying the stringency of the original bill as applicable to debtors. A resolution by Mr. Hoar was agreed to asking the secretary of state for comprehensive information as to the machinery of government, etc., of all foreign nations with which we have diplomatic relations, which went over after a brief discussion. The house was not in session on the 20th.

In the senate, on the 21st, Mr. Mason (Ill.) made his maiden speech in support of a resolution offered by him directing the committee on rules to report a rule by which debate could be closed and the previous question ordered. A vote was taken on Mr. Morgan's motion to refer the resolution to the rules committee, which resulted: Yeas, 32; nays, 24. It was agreed that a committee of 15 senators should represent the senate at the coming Grant memorial ceremonies. In the house, at the close of the chaplain's prayer, the death of Representative Milliken, of Maine, was announced by Mr. Dingley, and out of respect to his memory the hour, at 12:10 p. m., adjourned.

In the senate, on the 22d, Mr. Allen (Neb.) offered a resolution providing that the president express the sympathy of the American people to the government of Greece, and declaring that the present contest was one between Christianity and Paganism. The resolution was referred to the committee on foreign relations. The bankruptcy bill, framed by Mr. Nelson (Minn.) as a substitute for the Torrey bill, was passed. The homestead bill was made the unfinished business, and a committee of 15 was named to represent the senate at the Grant Memorial dedication. In the house a special order was adopted providing for the consideration of the senate amendments to the Indian appropriation bill without reference to a committee. While the amendments were being debated the death of Mr. Holman, of Indiana, was announced, and as a mark of respect the house adjourned.

The senate was not in session on the 23d. In the house consideration of the senate amendments to the Indian appropriation bill was completed and the bill was sent to conference. A resolution was passed which authorized a committee of 25 was appointed to attend the dedication of the Grant Memorial in New York on the 27th. The house then agreed to a programme of three-day adjournments for the ensuing week and adjourned.

SENATOR BURN, of Los Angeles, Cal., received a telegram from the sheriff of Hennepin county, Minn., on the 20th, requesting him to arrest Mrs. Laura Austin on a charge of abducting her own child, which was awarded to the custody of her ex-husband by the superior court at Minneapolis. The Sons of Confederate Veterans held a meeting in the Hotel Marlborough, New York city, on the 20th, and perfected arrangements for participating in the Grant parade on the 27th. The Pennsylvania board of pardons, on the 20th, recommended commutation of the death sentence imposed upon James B. Gentry for the murder of Actress Madge York to imprisonment for life. Gov. Hastings approved the recommendation. The interior department has granted permission to Chief Joseph, the Nez Perces warrior, to accompany Col. Cody in his Wild West show. STILL TRIUMPHANT.

The Valorous Greeks Victorious at All Points.

Crown Prince Constantine's Report The Turks Greatly Dismayed by the Destruction of Their Stores at Katerina and Litochoron.

Crown Prince Constantine's Report to the King.

LONDON, April 23.—The Athens correspondent of the Daily Chronicle says that the Crown Prince Constantine has wired to King George as follows:

"The Turks are quiet to-day, owing to our success yesterday (Thursday). We have destroyed the Turkish battery at Ligeria. The Turks have retired from Nezeros and Rapsani. The action of our fleet at Katerina was excellent. I was in the first line of fire yesterday."

The Chronicle's correspondent says: The Turks are greatly dismayed by the destruction of their stores at Katerina and Litochoron. Commodore Sachtouris destroyed the stores from the coast to the foot of Mount Olympus. Nothing remains, therefore, for Edhem Pasha to carry away but plunder.

The coast road being barred, the only remaining road from Salonica is the Ferri road, eight days from Ellassona. The reports of the injury to the railway line by the blowing up of bridges and a tunnel are confirmed.

Financially, everything is going well, and the value of paper money has risen. It is reported here (Athens) that the Turkish troops will be withdrawn from Crete.

Private advices from Volo say that all the villages between Katerina and Veria have risen.

Among the wounded who have arrived here are several who state that a number of the Greeks wounded at Gliboval, and unable to follow the Greek relief, were shut up in a small church by the Turks, who set fire to the building and burned them to death.

A Turkish Explanation of Non-Success.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 22.—(Delayed in transmission)—It is stated here that one of the Turkish brigades which had been pushed forward on the plains of Larissa has been unable to advance further, owing to floods caused by rains and the consequent rise of the River Salambria. Edhem Pasha has telegraphed asking for the immediate dispatch of pontoons to enable the troops to cross the river.

Additional Forces Ordered Out—Edhem Pasha Superbly by the Hero of Plevna.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 23.—Afternoon.—An additional force of Redif, or army reserves, has been called out to reinforce the Turkish troops operating against the Greeks. They consist of the Koniah brigade from Ceraria, a delegation from Samrya belonging to the Third army corps; three brigades from the Fourth army corps and a division of the Fifth army corps. These men will total up 72 additional battalions of troops numbering 50,400 men.

It is now definitely announced that Osman Pasha, the hero of Plevna, has been appointed commander-in-chief of the Turkish army having its headquarters at Ellassona. Edhem Pasha has been recalled. In addition Saad Edin Pasha has been appointed to command the Turkey army having its headquarters at Janina, replacing Ahmed Hifzi Pasha who is also recalled.

The new Turkish commanders start for their posts at once.

Will Call Out the Militia.

ATHENS, April 23.—It has been decided to call out the several regiments of the landwehr or militia.

In Greece all able-bodied males, from 21 years of age and upwards, are liable to be called upon for military service. The total service is for 10 years, of which four years (with considerable leaves of absence) must be passed with the colors; eight and seven years are then passed in the reserves and the remainder of the total term of 10 years is passed in the militia or landwehr.

Started for the Frontier.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 23.—Saad Edin Pasha who has been appointed to command the Turkish troops at Janina, in Epirus, started for the frontier, with his suite, this evening.

Hasty Flight of Turkish Households.

ARTA, April 22.—6 p. m.—The Turks have abandoned Kafia and Kosmitzades on the left bank of the Arachthos. The inhabitants left precipitately, abandoning their belongings. All along the route to Fort Imaret (captured by the Greeks), there were evidences of hasty flight.

The belongings of the Turks were everywhere scattered about. The prefect of Arta has reached Milippada. He was received with acclamation by the population. A number of Greek wounded have been brought to Milippada. The dead were left unburied.

POPULAR GRATITUDE

Expressed for the Escape of a Beloved Sovereign.

ROME, April 23.—Two workmen, comrades of Acciarito, have been taken into custody. Their arrest, however, is only a matter of precaution and to complete the inquiry being made into the attempt on the life of King Humbert.

The members of the royal family attended a teum to-day at the church in the Via del Solario. These majesties received a tremendous ovation on emerging from the building.

RECEDING WATERS

Mark the Flood Situation in the Lower Mississippi The Situation Greatly Improved—The River Unchanged at Natchez, but the Prospect Gloomy—Plants Must be so Late That There Will be Practically No Crops.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., April 23.—No new crevasses have appeared in the levees to-day, but the current of the river is still beating against the southern embankments with a fury that causes the gravest apprehension. The break at Delta has inundated 75,000 acres of the finest plantations in northern Louisiana, and the water continues to pour through the opening and is rapidly spreading over a greater area.

Reports from Greenville are not encouraging. While the water is slowly receding in the overflowed district of the Yazoo delta, yet it is almost certain that the planting of this year's crop will be 30 days late. The negro laborers are in a fearful state of destitution throughout the delta, although the government relief work is being carried on energetically.

The situation north of Memphis and in Arkansas, however, is greatly improved. Capt. Davis, the government purchasing officer here, will send out two boats loaded with provisions tomorrow, one going north and the other to the St. Francis river country. Capt. Davis states that this will be the last government shipment to these districts unless some new emergency arises.

Many people are returning to their farms in Arkansas, and the work of planting will begin shortly. According to the official bulletin of the United States weather bureau, the Mississippi river at Memphis fell three-tenths of a foot in the past 30 hours, and will continue to fall slowly at this point.

From Cairo, Ill., a most encouraging report comes. It is to the effect that the river there fell seven-tenths of a foot since the last bulletin was issued, and will continue to fall at that rate for some days to come.

At Vicksburg and New Orleans there are no changes, the river remaining stationary. At all other points from which bulletins are issued a decline is reported varying from one-tenth to eight-tenths of a foot. The greatest fall is at Shreveport, La., where the gauge shows a decline of eight-tenths of a foot in 24 hours. The Missouri river at Kansas City and at Omaha fell three-tenths of a foot.

The rivers at Nashville and Chattanooga also registered a fall. In fact no rise was reported at any point covered by the weather bureau in its official bulletin.

A Few Days Will Tell the Story at New Orleans.

NEW ORLEANS, April 24.—The monster river stood still Thursday. Clouds gathered, but no rain fell. It was altogether a fine day for work and great work was done. There is need for it. New Orleans and Algiers have several weak levees to look after. Just below in St. Bernard are two, just above, taking both sides of the river together, between here and Baton Rouge, are half a dozen. New Orleans has 2,000 men at work, and the other places have many more.

Lumber in carloads and by the trainload is being used, and the rally before the last days of the flood is magnificent. It is one of the finest fights in history, and only a few days more remain before the crisis will be reached.

As previously stated, the battle has had its lessons, and a great deal has been learned about the way to obtain the most strength of levees, about revetments and about the importance of proper drainage for the embankments. A point which was heretofore almost entirely neglected. Now the state experiment station at Audubon park announces a number of interesting tests in progress. Various kinds of earth are being submitted to outer pressure as to its penetrability, and when the experiments are completed the science of levee building will be much more exact.

River Unchanged, But the Prospect Gloomy.

NATCHEZ, Miss., April 23.—The river is unchanged here, but many people are becoming gloomy again over the threatened outlook for rain and wind to-night. The levees are being soaked and are now seeping. A hard rain would play havoc with them. A hard rain or windstorm at Vidalia would be more disastrous than anywhere in this section. A slight wind this afternoon sent water splashing over the levee in front of that city.

Many refugees continue to arrive at Natchez. The backwater from the Bigges and Reed's crevasses continues to fill the lowlands and swamps with water. The headwater from the break has not yet arrived. The Black and Tensas rivers are rapidly rising from this break and are covering the country of that section.

The Outlook More Gloomy—Comparisons of Gauge Readings.

GREENVILLE, Miss., April 23.—The outlook in the delta, grows more gloomy. The Associated Press to-day made comparisons of this morning's gauge readings with those of the same day in 1890. At Cairo the river stands 11 feet higher than in 1890. At Memphis it is 6 feet higher; at Helena 2½ feet higher, and at Greenville 2 feet higher. While the Ohio and its tributaries are low and falling, the Missouri is higher and the Mississippi is rising at St. Louis.

Burglars at Clarkburg.

Burglars raided Clarkburg, a town nine miles south of Huntingdon, last week and entered the business house of J. M. Watson & Co., blew open their safe and secured over $300. They also entered Pritchard & Co.'s store, but failed to get anything. They drilled the safe and used explosives. They left no clue by which their arrest could be effected. It is an organized gang that have of late rifled safes in towns without banks in Carroll and adjoining counties.

Three Fires at Dickson.

Within twelve hours three fires, two of them destructive, occurred last week in Dickson. The Dickson Foundry and Machine Company's plant was totally burned; loss $4,000. J. R. Bryan's dwelling burned and also T. C. Soaman's stove yard, containing 2,000,000 seasoned staves, caught, and twenty residences were in danger, but hard work overcame the flames.

An Impositor at Jackson.

The Rev. W. M. Hicks, who claims to be collecting money for the flood sufferers, has been at work in Madison county and was in Jackson last week. He claims to have forwarded $25 in an open letter to a Mr. Daniel at Memphis, who, he states, is a member of the committee. He also states he forwarded $1 by registered letter. Hicks' statements appeared to be fishy, and he received no encouragement. He seems to be operating principally in the rural districts.

Misfortune Piling Up.

Two suits for damages were filed at Knoxville last week against Col. Frank McNulty, owner of the Hotel Knox, which was burned on April 8. One suit, for $20,000, is brought by Mrs. Lottie Weeks, wife of A. E. Weeks, who lost his life in the fire, and the other, for $5,000, is by A. S. Crowder, who sustained injuries in jumping. In the bills filed it is recited that the building had no fire escape, which was in violation of a city law.

State Board of Pharmacy.

The State board of pharmacy met at Nashville last week and adjourned to meet again July 23 for the purpose of examining candidates for registration. A second quarterly session will be held at Nashville in October.

State Education Board.

Powell, Dancyville, first vice-president. Whiteville was selected as the place for holding the next semi-annual meeting. The annual meeting will be held at Nashville.

The Governor Returns.

Nashville, April 23.—Gov. Taylor returned from Tate Springs today, completely restored to health. He showed his recovery in looks, manner and conversation. His rest has been of infinite advantage to him. The governor today reappointed Dr. T. G. Voigt of Chattanooga a member of the State board of pharmacy. The governor has 114 bills awaiting his signature, and will have little rest from now till the legislature reassembles.

Calaboose Dynamited.

The little town of Sweetwater, in Monroe county, is in a state of excitement. A few nights ago unknown parties blew up the city calaboose, using dynamite for the purpose. Fortunately no one was confined in the building at the time.

Weather and Crops.

Nashville, April 23.—The weather during the week was, as a rule, much more favorable for farm work. Farmers are pushing forward the work of the season as rapidly as the conditions of the soil and weather will permit.

THE STATE OF TRADE.

Summary of Business Conditions as Indicated by R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review—Business Failures for the Week, Etc.

NEW YORK, April 24.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: If either Turkey or Greece had been wholly buried in the sea, markets might have been affected less than by the outbreak of war in Europe. Like first and foremost, whether a general conflagration may spring out of it. To this possibility and not to the direct influence of either Turkey or Greece upon the world's money or produce markets was due the excitement in grain and stocks. As the unknown is magnified, American markets were much more flighty than European, where the possibilities have been discussed and partly discounted for months. But the uncertainty remains and will affect the movement of money and staples until it disappears, creating a larger demand for American products at higher prices, causing hasty speculative selling of securities at times, but also more continuous buying by foreign investors and, most importantly, influencing the attitude of foreign powers on questions important to this country.

Wheat rose six cents from Thursday to Monday, and has retained most of the rise. Since Russia and the Danubian states will be likely to ship wheat scantily, special needs and much higher prices being possible there, a larger share of the requirements of western Europe may naturally be drawn from this country, and the chance of a war between the great powers has the more influence, because supplies there are not large. While western receipts do not yet increase, and in three weeks have been but 5,641,001, against 5,933,193 last year, Atlantic exports begin to gain slightly, amounting to 1,190,329 bushels, flour included, against 1,085,764 last year, and for three weeks have been 3,588,170 bushels, against 3,453,079 last year. But the great increase is in corn, on which the price has scarcely advanced, though Atlantic exports were 4,189,146 bushels, against 2,634,732 last year.

Already the exports for the crop year have been 38,000,000 bushels larger than Atlantic exports of wheat and flour, and may soon exceed the total exports of wheat and flour from both coasts.

Cotton has been affected scarcely at all, though government estimates that the flood districts yielded nearly 500,000 bales, for increased acreage in other sections is generally reported.

The past week, like others of late, has witnessed the starting of operations by several iron works, especially in black sheets for tinning, and yet prices of iron and unfinished products are lower, demand not yet equaling the supply. Bessemer pig has sold as low as $9.05 at Pittsburgh and gray forge at $5.50 in Birmingham. Steel billets fell to $14.25 at Pittsburgh and angles to 1 cent, but wire rods cannot be supplied fast enough at $21.75. Nails are strong, and a few more structural orders are pending. Eastern works also have orders for 15,000 tons of steel rails.

Complaint and proof that the demand for the products is deficient, blinds many to the fact that the actual work in progress, largely the heavy orders for beams, billets, and sheet bars taken when the pools broke up, is of greater volume than for a long time.

Large sales of copper are reported at 11½ cents, with production 17,288 tons in March. The end of stipulated curtailment has been reached by some cotton mills, and nearly by all, and since the auction sales some bleached goods have been slightly advanced, but actual buying does not increase and print cloths do not improve.

Sales of wool have been largely of foreign, quantities being swelled by arrivals of reports sold some time ago and imports at Boston for the week were 33,000 bales. For the three chief cities sales were 34,038,800 pounds in three weeks, 30,271,300 being foreign, including 8,564,063 foreign. But manufacturers are doing scarcely anything, and orders for goods improve very little, though for somewhat better grades.

Failures for the week have been 218 in the United States, against 238 last year, and 21 in Canada, against 44 last year.

THE ONE-WAY RATE PLAN

For Christian Endeavor Passenger Traffic to San Francisco.

CHICAGO, April 24.—At a meeting of the western roads yesterday afternoon, held to consider Christian Endeavor rates, a resolution was submitted for the adoption of a one-way rate of $5 in both directions between Chicago and San Francisco via the Missouri river, and $32.50 via St. Paul and Portland. This resolution is assured of adoption.

The Southern Pacific road objects to the one-way rate plan, but the other lines think it is the only way left them of protecting their local business. Of course the Southern Pacific can refuse to adopt the plan, and if so, that would kill it. In that case, however, the western roads would simply say that under such circumstances they did not care to go into the business at all. The result of that course would be to take the convention away from San Francisco and leave the Southern Pacific in the cold.

CHINESE DIPLOMATS.

C. C. DEBOSE, PROPRIETOR.

COLUMBIANA, APRIL 29, 1897.

FLOOD STATISTICS.

The following statistics, clipped from an exchange, relative to the recent flood will doubtless be of interest to our readers as it shows, among other things, the total number of acres submerged and the amount of damage done the crops. For lack of space we are unable to give the full statistics but hope this will give some idea as to its extent and the great damage done.

"The total area under water, April 6, was about 15,800 square miles, of which 7,900 square miles was in Mississippi, 4,500 square miles in Arkansas, 1,750 square miles in Missouri, 1,200 in Tennessee, and 450 in Louisiana. This region contained in 1890, so far as can be determined in view of the somewhat indefinite boundary lines of the flood, a population of 379,685. The number of farms is estimated at about 39,500, having a total area of 3,800,000 acres. The total value of these farms, with their improvements, implements, etc., is close upon $65,000,000. The live stock on hand the 1st of January of the present year was valued at over $7,500,000. It is estimated that of the crops of last year over $3,750,000 worth remained on hand in the submerged region on the last of the month, cotton representing about two-thirds of this amount, and corn practically all the remainder.

MISSISSIPPI.

The largest interests at stake so far are those of the state of Mississippi, whose flooded districts represent an invested capital in agriculture alone of close upon forty-two million dollars. Over eighteen thousand farms, containing two million acres of land, of an average value of about eighteen dollars an acre, are under water in the country lying between the Mississippi and Yazoo rivers, including some of the most productive lands of the state. Their live stock, even at the present low prices, is worth nearly three and one-half million dollars, and the farmers and planters are estimated to have about two million dollars worth of the crops of last year still on hand.

ARKANSAS.

Aarkansas stands next in the extent of its imperiled interests, nearly ten thousand farms, containing one million acres of land, worth over fourteen million dollars, being submerged. These farms contain live stock to the value of over one and one-half million dollars, and crops unsold and unconsumed to the value of nearly nine hundred thousand dollars, the entire agricultural interests of these lands representing a value not far short of seventeen million dollars as now estimated.

MISSOURI.

The agricultural interests affected in Missouri represent a total capital of rather over $9,000,000, the 5,300 submerged farms containing an area of about 470,000 acres, worth about $7,250,000, the live stock representing nearly $1,500,000 more, and the crops on hand another $500,000. Tennessee is not far behind Missouri in the extent of its imperiled interests, the number and acreage of the submerged farms being very nearly the same, and the entire value, including $1,250,000 for live stock and $400,000 for crops on hand, being estimated at over $5,500,000.

What effect the flood will have upon the crops of the present season depends upon the length of its continuance and the practicability of wheat planting after the subsidence of the flood. The entire region under water on April 6th, produced last year about 370,000 bales of cotton, valued at close on $13,000,000; over 11,000,000 bushels of corn, worth about $3,400,000, and wheat, oats, potatoes and hay worth over $800,000 more. The most valuable portion of these crops was raised in Mississippi, whose region now submerged produced nearly a quarter of a million bales of cotton, besides other products, mostly for local consumption.

Whatever the result of a war between Turkey and Greece may be, it can not but elevate christianity. The six powers can not uphold the Turk without deserving and earning the contempt of the christian world, and should they succeed in conquering Greece and subjecting the christians to the rapine, murder and horrors of the degraded Turk, it will only be a question of a short time when the good sense and just action of an enraged civilized people will reverse the order of things and bear triumphant the cross of Christ throughout the bloody fields of Mohammedanism.—New Boston Herald.

The counties in Mississippi now submerged are among the largest cotton producing counties in the United States. Yazoo county, which alone has produced over fifty thousand bales in a season, is one-half under water, while Bolivar county, Coahoma, Issaquena, Washington (with a productive capacity of 100,000 bales), and other famous counties, are partially submerged.

Much excitement prevailed at Tusculumbia a few days ago over the mysterious appearance of something, said to be an air ship, passing near the town. Much has been said of late about this ship but it was believed to be a fake, yet those who saw it there affirm that it is an absolute fact.

An Oklahoma legislator has introduced a bill for the suppression of the loud plaid necktie. That is getting legislation down pretty fine.

IS NOT THIS TRUE.

"The test of civilization is not in the census, nor the size of the cities, nor the crops; no, but in the kind of man a country turns out."

Judged by this standard the South has been behind none of her contemporaries; for surely the country which has given to the world such men as Jefferson, Lee, Davis and Stephens, has demonstrated her ability to produce men of finest mould.

Still, in the present congested state of our south land there is danger of our losing sight of the duty we owe to our generation, and instead of reaching after the production of the ideal man, contenting ourselves with the development of the money-grubber, the wire-puller, the demagogue. The universal discontent that now prevails so before the public mind, that it only seems to see what is expedient for today; taking no account of the grand result that will confront us in coming years.

We are waking up to the fact that goods manufactured of cotton and machinery made of iron are worth more to Alabama than the raw material. The material development of the state is right enough, but is it not infinitely more important that the average man give to his state a hand and heart and brain, whose culture will fit him for usefulness as a citizen? The mineral wealth that lies hidden in the hills of Alabama is not worthy to be compared with the stalwart sons, who unconscious of any calamity, except for toil, persistently war with poverty from the cradle to the grave. Given this dogged persistence, together with manual and mental training, and the sons of Alabama would soon raise her to that position among her sister states which is hers by right of natural gifts.

The significance of any state is in direct proportion to the intelligence of her population. With all our grand possibilities, our state stands almost at the foot of the list as to education. Is comment necessary?

Young man, you can confer upon Alabama no gift so valuable, none so much needed, as a pure, noble manhood. Is not this her duty?

MARAH.

HAS THE RIGHT IDEA.

From the Commercial Appeal.

Representative Sayers, of Texas, who was chairman of the appropriations committee in the last democratic congress, and has had much experience in dealing with government works, suggests a plan for a comprehensive settlement of the Mississippi river problem.

Mr. Sayers would have the United States government invite the engineers of the world to consider the problem of controlling the Mississippi river, and to present plans for a permanent system, so that the government might adopt the ideas of the best engineering talent. For this purpose he suggests that a competition might be brought about by an offer of prizes—perhaps $50,000—for the plan which should be considered best, and $25,000 for the second best—inducements sufficient to attract the most skillful engineers of the world, those who have dealt with such works as the Suez canal and the dykes of Holland. Notices of the competition would be published in the principal cities of Europe, in India, Australia, Japan and every other country. Competitors would be instructed to disregard the local interests of cities and to present plans for permanently establishing and controlling the channels of the Mississippi and its suburbs, on the basis of the welfare of the entire Mississippi valley. The decision of the competition would be in the hands of a commission of engineers selected from the engineer corps of the army and from civil life.

By this plan Mr. Sayers believes the government could secure the ideas of the best engineers of the world, who might be induced by the offer of a large reward to personally study the great river and the possibilities of controlling it. Any system of works which would stand the supreme test would justify great expenditure, he thinks, and some system different from the present attempts to control the river he believes must inevitably be adopted sooner or later.

Historic Trees.

From St. Nicholas.

On West One Hundred and Fifty-ninth street and St. Nicholas avenue, Washington Heights, stand a number of remarkable trees. They were formerly the grounds surrounding the old Jumel mansion which is now known as Earle Cliff. They are Egyptian cypresses, and have a history, like everything pertaining to this remarkable mansion and its grounds. They were sent as a present to Napoleon Bonaparte from the sultan of Egypt as a gift of honor, but arrived in Havre, France, just after the battle of Waterloo. Stephen Jumel, who was in France at the time, and a personal friend of Napoleon, succeeded in gaining an audience with the emperor the night before he was banished to the Island of St. Helena. Napoleon presented these trees to Jumel, who brought them to America on the clipper ship Eliza, which he had chartered with the idea of helping Napoleon to escape to this country. These trees, when brought here, had their native earth still clinging to their roots. They were planted as described above, where they flourished and grew to a larger size, spreading out their peculiar branches wide over their adopted soil—a mute reminder of the decay of empires as well as people. I would recommend that the park commissioners remove them to Central park, as they are probably the only ones in this country; there are certainly none other with such an unique history.

PAT.

UNITED STATES AND GREECE.

From the Nashville Banner.

Although the United States Government will probably maintain a position of neutrality in relation to the struggle between Turkey and Greece, unless unexpected causes should arise affecting the honor of this nation, the sympathies of the American people will go out to the little kingdom which, if unaided by some of the greater powers, will be forced to wage an unequal conflict. It may also be assumed that the administration will entertain a kindly feeling for Greece, even if it does not feel called upon to make any vigorous expressions of this feeling. When Greece was engaged in her struggle to throw off the Ottoman yoke President Monroe, in his message to congress, December 3, 1822, spoke a good word for the revolutionists. He said:

"Europe is still unsettled, and although the long-menaced war between Russia and Turkey has not broken out, there is no certainty that the differences between those powers will be amicably adjusted. It is impossible to look to the expressions of the country respecting which those differences arose without being deeply affected. The mention of Greece fills the mind with the most exalted sentiments, and arouses in our bosoms the best feelings of which our nation is susceptible: Superior skill and refinement in the arts, heroic gallantry in action, disinterested patriotism, enthusiastic zeal and devotion in favor of public and personal liberty are associated with our recollections of ancient Greece. That such a country should have been overwhelmed and so long hidden, as it were, from the world under a gloomy despotism, has been a cause of unceasing and deep regret to generous minds for ages past. It was natural, therefore, that the reappearance of those people in their original character, contending in favor of their liberties, should produce that great excitement and sympathy in their favor which have been so signally displayed throughout the United States. A strong hope is entertained that these people will recover their independence and resume their equal station among the nations of the earth."

Want Beet Sugar Seed.

An exchange says: "The agricultural department is being importuned from all parts of the country for beet sugar seed. In view of the unsatisfactory prices received for staple crops during the past few years and the prospective increase in the duty on sugar, farmers in all sections of the union evidently intend to experiment with beet sugar culture. Heretofore beet sugar growing has been confined almost exclusively to Nebraska, Kansas and California. The agricultural department has sent beet seeds in the spring to about thirty states and territories. The demand comes from Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, the Dakotas, Texas, New Mexico, Iowa, Missouri, Minnesota, Tennessee, Kentucky and Virginia. There have also been requests from Pennsylvania and New York. A Nebraska sugar refining company donated five tons of beet seed to the department and the department purchased two tons additional. The supply is about exhausted, but the demand continues. If successful, the industry will probably be developed in many of the states in which experiments are being made this year, supplanting corn and wheat.

THE SOUTHERN RAILWAY'S EXHIBIT AT THE TENNESSEE CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Arrangements have been perfected by which the Southern Railway's territory will be represented at the exposition which opens at Nashville on May 1. This, like former exhibits made by that company, will include sample specimens of mineral, agricultural, forest and other products of the states of Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, East Tennessee and Kentucky. This company's exhibit at the Atlanta and Pittsburg Expositions attracted the attention of the agriculturist, manufacturer, miner, stock-raiser and others, and did more to educate the visitors to an appreciation of the great wealth and possibilities of the South than any other one exhibit that was shown, and it is the policy of the company to actively continue this method of advertising. The scenic beauties of the country through which the Southern Railway runs will not be neglected in this exhibit.

Practically, this exhibit will be a bureau of information, so that visitors from the North and abroad can obtain specific data relative to all branches of industry in and tributary to the vast number of points on the Southern Railway.

This exhibit is under the direction of the Land and Industrial Department of the Southern Railway with headquarters at Washington, D. C., and persons located along that system having exhibit material that they think will interest the public and thereby help advance the best interest of the section from which it comes, should at once communicate with the agent of that department.

This is an exhibit in which every citizen of this section should be interested, and we hope that some of our readers can supply something to represent our territory.

The Afternoon Nap.

From the Medical Press.

The frequency with which medical men are asked whether it is harmful to indulge in the "afternoon nap" is not, perhaps, surprising, for several reasons. Most persons have had experience in the seductive charms of the somnolence which has followed the comfortable ingestion of a midday or evening meal. The meal finished, the diner arranges himself comfortably in an armchair, takes up a newspaper and prepares to make the most of the restful conditions of his mind and body. But nature soon begins to assert her sway. In time, the eyelids close, the head begins to nod, the newspaper falls from the hands and the symptoms of a nap are complete. Whether the "winks" be forty or one hundred in number, the result is the same—a short, sound sleep. Then comes the question. Is it harmful thus to fall asleep after a meal? By no means, for the very obvious reason that the process is merely a physiological one, and as such, when it occurs, is quite natural. When digestion is in progress, nature has arranged that all the available blood in the body shall be collected in and about the digestive organs. Consequently, the blood supply to the brain falls to a low ebb, and thus sleep is easily induced. On the other hand, of course, physiologically, it is wrong for brain work to be attempted immediately after a solid meal.

The Telegraph in Persia.

From the New York Tribune.

The Overland Telegraph line, which connects England with her great Indian empire, passes through Persia and has recently been subjected to an interruption of a quite serious character, due to the fanaticism of the populace. It seems that there has been a terrible drought, which the subjects of the shah, instead of attributing to providence, ascribed, on the contrary to the telegraph poles, and, above all, to the posts and signs of the survey department of the company. Accordingly all the obnoxious poles, wires and survey signs were destroyed by a priest led mob. Strangely enough, heavy rain fell immediately afterward, and now, in spite of the severe punishment inflicted by the Teheran government upon the ringleaders, the masses of the population throughout Persia are firmly convinced that telegraph and survey posts are productive of drought and inventions of the devil.

Americans are the most inventive people on earth. To them have been issued nearly 600,000 patents, or more than one-third of all the patents issued in the world. A Politician.

Question: "What is a politician?" Answer: "A politician is a man who understands politics." Q: "What is politics?" A: "Politics is the art of getting a $700 man a $3,000 job." Q: "Is that all there is in politics?" A: "No." Q: "What else?" A: "The man has to study out a way to get re-elected to his $3,000 job without spending $2,900 with the boys."—The American.

Two years ago R. J. Warren, a druggist at Pleasant Brook, N. Y., bought a small supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He sums up the result as follows: "At that time the goods were unknown in this section; today Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is a household word." It is the same in hundreds of communities. Wherever the good qualities of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy become known the people will have nothing else. For sale by J. E. Seale & Co., Druggists.

It is said that a young man in Nashville, Tenn., has invented a carriage that will run fifteen miles an hour without horses. Some one said that the yankees freed the negroes, and "electricity" freed the mules, and now this young man proposes to free the horses. We would like to know where this thing is going to end.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

The Rev. W. H. Weaver, pastor of the U. B. Church, Dillsburg, Pa., recognizes the value of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and does not hesitate to tell others about it. "I have used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy," he says, "and find it an excellent medicine for colds, coughs and hoarseness." So does everyone who gives it a trial. Sold by J. E. Seale & Co., Druggists.

Early yesterday morning we received from that most kind and lovable of ladies—Mrs. J. W. Johnston, the most exquisite bouquet of roses it has ever been our pleasure to look upon. Besides being the choicest of flowers, they were so artistically arranged as to give them double beauty. As we endeavor to write, their fragrance fills our very soul with joy and lifts our thoughts from the low, groveling pursuits of life and points them to higher and nobler ambitions. Surely, there can be no better symbol of purity than such sweet flowers and they would inspire us to worship and adore the maker of such wondrous beauty. Mrs. Johnston says that in this collection there are clippings from fifty different bushes. We are unable to express our thanks and appreciation for this lovely present, but, suffice it to say, that you madam shall ever have a tender spot in our heart of hearts.

We have just received intelligence of the marriage, on last week in Longview, Texas, of Mr. L. P. Henderson to Miss Mary Morrison, formerly of near this place. The ice cream supper on last Friday night at the residence of Rev. W. I. Sinnott was a grand success, both financially as well as socially. All who attended report having spent the most pleasant evening they have enjoyed for some time and say also that the cream and sherbet were simply too good to mention. The gross proceeds amounted to something over $17.00.

A beautiful home wedding took place on last Wednesday evening at Calera in which Mr. W. G. Bealland, proprietor of Talladega Springs, and Miss Stella Onderdonk, a charming young lady of that place, were united in matrimony. The Chronicle wishes for them a life of joy and prosperity.

G. W. Wallis, Jr., transacted business in Columbian Monday and Saturday of last week.

We would suggest that some of our some folks laugh and talk less in Sabbath school and prayermeeting: some even talking during prayer. Some of ye "elite" (?) lookout, or you will get your names in the paper.

A Beautiful Wedding.

Last Wednesday evening, a short while after the lullaby of twilight had been sung and the evening zephyrs had wafted from vision the grand pictures of the Masters handiwork, the little Presbyterian church of Wilsonville found itself beautifully alighted, and filled with innumerable guests, awaiting the arrival of a bride and groom. The church with its lovely girls and beautiful flowers of decoration seemed aglow with limitless beauty like the myriad scenes from the Paraisaical fields of Eden. No Parisian could have arranged more beautifully. No Grecian sculptor designed more skillfully. As we sat musing in that pleasant attitude, our souls were suddenly filled with enraptured joy, as the mellowed strains of Mendelssohn's Grand March, played by Miss Rosa Wallis, rang out upon the evening zephyrs like the softened sound of an "Edian" harp. Then it was that Mr. E. Williamson, the clever operator of the Southern Railway, and Miss Lula Densler, the lovely belle of Wilsonville, marched down the aisle of sincerity to take their position beneath the umbrella of love, which was beautifully wreathed in those exquisite roses—Marechal Neil. The bride was beautifully dressed in white cashmere, moire and lace with lovely roses falling in tender token around her swan-like neck. The groom wore a handsome suit of black. The attendants, Miss Blossom Densler with Mr. J. C. Jackson, and Miss Maude Williamson with Mr. W. R. Smith, were all tastefully and appropriately dressed. Rev. Parrish performed the sweet, but solemn ceremony in beautiful style, after which the invited friends proceeded to the home of the bride where they were tendered an elegant reception.

The Chronicle would add its best wishes with the friends of Mr. Williamson and bride. United in their young lives they begin life under the brightest prospects—May all their days so continue.

CIRCUIT COURT, SPRING TERM, 1897.

It appearing that Anna Seale, alias Anna Seales, alias Anna F. Seales, is under indictment for murder in the first degree, and that the said cause is pending in this court, and that the term fixed by law for the regular term of the court is insufficient for the trial of said cause, and it being in the opinion of George E. Brewer, Judge of the Circuit Court of Shelby County, Ala., that a special term of said court for the trial of said cause is necessary, it is therefore ordered that a special term of the Circuit Court for Shelby County, Ala., be held, beginning on Monday, the 7th day of June 1897, for the trial of the said Anna Seale, alias Anna Seales alias Anna F. Seales, under said indictment. And it is further ordered, that the Jury Commissioners of Shelby County draw fifty names from the jury box of Shelby County, to serve as jurors at said term and furnish a list of the same to the clerk of this court as provided by law. It is further ordered, that the clerk of this court issue to the sheriff the proper order for summoning said jurors as required by law, and that the sheriff summons the same as required by law. It is further ordered, that thirty days notice of said special term be given by advertisement of this order in some newspaper published in Shelby county.

Signed and dated this 5th day of April, 1897.

Scrofula Tumors

Broke Out and Caused Intense Suffering—Hood's Sarsaparilla Keeps the Blood Pure.

"Several years ago I had scrofula which appeared in tumors in different parts of my body. It took five weeks for them to develop so they could be lanced and I suffered intensely. Physicians failed to cure me. After three years of great suffering the trouble reached my throat and my tonsils were consumed. I read of cures of scrofula by Hood's Sarsaparilla and procured six bottles. After taking a few bottles I felt better. I continued until I was eventually cured. I have never been troubled with scrofula since that time. Hood's Sarsaparilla keeps my blood pure in spring and fall." Mrs. SARAH G. DALES, Rutland, Ill. Be sure to get Hood's because

"ONLYEST" ONE.

Blev Scroggins the Smoothest Card in the Pack.

"Out for Stunt" and in the Game to Win—A Handsome Young Widow and Sixty Acres was the Stakes.

When in the fullness of time—and through the gracious plenty of His wisdom and mercy—the good Lord raked up the necessary materials to make the most smoothest card in the whole pack—there ain't any doubts in my mind but what about that time Blev Scroggins first saw the light of day in this lost and ruin world.

In my day and generation I have scraped up passin acquaintance with great squads and droves of people, with at the same time I don't claim to know but mighty few. But if I don't know Blev Scroggins—if I don't know him as perfect and familiar as a school-boy knows his old blue-back speller—then by gracious I don't know a livin mortal man on the broad bosom of the discovered earth.

Many and many's the time I have heard Blev make his brags about how he could "come into the game with narry pair and take the pile," and in regards to that he is the onlyest man I have ever saw that could handle the "documents" to that extent.

In the Game to Win.

"This plain, everyday life which we are now livin is a game, anyhow, Rufe, and everybody plays it one way or another," says Blev to me once upon a time. "If you don't play somebody, the next thing you know somebody will play you. We are all in the game—barned and bred and sprung in it—and the onlyest way under the sun to keep from playin your hand out is to shuck off your mortal toils and put on your white wings and quit this dull old world."

"Now as for me, if I didn't know any more about handlin of the documents than some people, blamed if I wouldn't tend a night school hand runnin for ten years to come. And if there is any points about the game in general which I haven't already learnt, by the stars and stripes it was tore out of the books before my day and time."

"Right now, Rufe, you mought as well take out your little note book and set it down that Blev Scroggins is in the game to win. You never heard me make any proud, high-flyin remarks about the family records of the Scroggins generation of people, and you never will. So far as I know, we didn't come down from the highristerocracy of the first settlers of this great and growin country. On my own hook I raley don't know for certain whether I ever had any great-grandfather at all scarcely, but I reckon I did. At any rates, I am willing to leave that question for time and future history to settle. No doubts you have heard me claim some kinnery with a man by the name of Scroggins which fit plum through three wars and swum the Potomac river one cold winter night to beat George Washington in a little game of stud poker. But we will let that pass, Rufe. According to the Scriptures all men are liars off and on, more or less."

"But whilst the Scroggins people are only plain American citizens—without any extry frills and fancy trimmings—you mought as well to remember that there are two places in this country where no mortal man of my name can be found—the Poor House and the Crazy Asylum. And I am in this game to win. Rufe, I never will be good enough to turn out and preach, nor smart enough to run for congress, and it's little more than wch that I have learnt in books. But by gattins, I do know tremendous well that—with flushes barred—four aces will bust the bank. And I am in the game to win."

"Foreordained to Sin and Sufferin."

Days and weeks and months and years have rolled by and stacked up in the past since me and Blev rid down the old Jackson Trail road one mornin along in the spring of the year and I heard him talkin with his mouth about the game of every day life, wherein he had learnt the documents and would play to win. And it all come back to my mind as clear as a bell the other day when old man Blev Phillips driv by our house on his return back home from a trip over in the River bend. I couldn't keep from thinkin about the time when old man Ran met Blev in a little game—which a handsome young widder woman and 60 acres of swamp land was the stakes—and how the old man, with a full hand and three cards up his sleeve, as it were, had to cut the pot and divide the pile, whilst Blev helt nothin to speak of or to bet on.

"Everything that goes up must come down, Rufe," says Blev to me out at the horse rack one night after supper. "In this God forsaken country mortal man born of woman is foreordained to sin and sufferin, and from all the signs of the times it would seem to me like old man Ran Phillips will have to stand his turn and take his dose."

With that Blev shut one eye slow and cautious like and whistled a few stanzas soft and low. And from that day till this I have took particular notice that a slow wink and a little soft whistle from Blev Scroggins simply means that somebody must suffer, and you mought as well stand from under.

"You recollect that old man Ran has got 60 acres of bully swamp land which joins my farm over there on the creek, Rufe," Blev went on tacetly. "Well, naturally of course I haven't got any money. If whiskey was goin at four bits a barrel I raley couldn't buy enough to change a baby's breath. But if I don't straddle that 60 acres of swamp land in less time than three weeks—with the deeds and titlements made out bomb-proof in my own full and proper name—then human nature ain't human any more, the ways of this wicked world are past findin out, and Blev Scroggins has never yet shedded his colt's teeth."

"What's on the wind?" Old man Ran is a poor, lone widower—with nobody to comfort and console him in his few remaining days on earth—nobody to darn his socks and patch his clothes, and nobody to fling the sunshine across his path as he hobble on down the hill, as it were. Old man Ran wants to get married. He wants to marry so bad till he don't know anything for certain. You

"In this God forsaken country mortal man born of woman is foreordained to sin and sufferin, and from all the signs of the times it would seem to me like old man Ran Phillips will have to stand his turn and take his dose."

With that Blev shut one eye slow and cautious like and whistled a few stanzas soft and low. And from that day till this I have took particular notice that a slow wink and a little soft whistle from Blev Scroggins simply means that somebody must suffer, and you mought as well stand from under.

"You recollect that old man Ran has got 60 acres of bully swamp land which joins my farm over there on the creek, Rufe," Blev went on tacetly. "Well, naturally of course I haven't got any money. If whiskey was goin at four bits a barrel I raley couldn't buy enough to change a baby's breath. But if I don't straddle that 60 acres of swamp land in less time than three weeks—with the deeds and titlements made out bomb-proof in my own full and proper name—then human nature ain't human any more, the ways of this wicked world are past findin out, and Blev Scroggins has never yet shedded his colt's teeth."

"What's on the wind?" Old man Ran is a poor, lone widower—with nobody to comfort and console him in his few remaining days on earth—nobody to darn his socks and patch his clothes, and nobody to fling the sunshine across his path as he hobble on down the hill, as it were. Old man Ran wants to get married. He wants to marry so bad till he don't know anything for certain. You could take a bundle of calico and a little bunch of red ribbon and make a ravin idiot out of that old man before sunrise in the mornin.

"Now the Widder Stinson—Nan Weaver as she use to be—she would love tremendous well to give her own sweet self away, for better or for worse, to some man person. Old man Ran has already fell wider over appetite in love with the widder—and well—the widder she ain't gone nowhere. So there you are, Rufe—two souls with but one mainest hope, two hearts that ache as one—and the country is now seriously threatened with music and dancin and another weddin march."

"But if Blev Scroggins aint all sorts of a fool at once, old man Ran Phillips never will marry himself off with the Widder Stinson—never in the round discovered world, Rufe—till all the deeds and titlements to that 60 acres of swamp land are signed, sealed and landed safe in the old family chest at home."

They Rushed the Game.

Raley it was nothin to me and none of my business, but I told Blev he would better rush the game all he could. When two people—one a man and the other a woman—have both been married one time already, and then take up a fool notion to go and come and try the fatal step once more, you never can tell how sudden and surprisin it will be.

Bright and early next mornin Blev come by our house drivin his big high-headed, dapple gray horse to a spankin new buggy and splittin the big road wide open as he went. He was all dressed out in his Sunday best, with his whiskers dyed black as night, and bless the heavens if you couldn't stand on the front porch and smell the bear grease and cinnamon drops in his hair as he driv—whistlin soft and low and headed straight for the Widder Stinsons.

"Mind you now, Rufe, I never have put myself out on the bargain counter to get married," said Blev to me the other night, "but I reckon I mought let some good woman hornsoggle me into a game like that if nothin else would meet the general circumstance of the calamity. I wouldn't even make out to you like I wouldn't be worth the livin to me without the Widder Stinson for my wife. But yet when it comes to courtin and carryin on with the female generation I aint no slench, and it won't take me more than a week to put old man Ran through a cold sweat and give him palpitation of the heart. He can have the widder and more than well come, but he can't take her and still hold the papers to that 60 acres of swamp land. This vain and fleetin world is full of trials and troubles and tribulations, and sickness and sorrow and sufferin anyhow, Rufe, and old man Ran's time has come."

Down to a Finish.

Then about the next news we got Blev Scroggins and the Widder Stinson had worked up a scandalous bad love scrape and pitched out flyin around and courtin and goin on to beat six bits. They flew so high and went so fast, and kept company together so reglar and constant till it was the talk of the country for miles and miles around. It was Blev Scroggins and the Widder Stinson, or the Widder Stinson and Blev Scroggins, wherever you went.

And yet still old man Ran Phillips would pole off down there two or three times every week to pay his double-breasted regards to the widder—which if she didn't happen to be out ridin up and down the big road with Blev Scroggins, she want even brideweive to old man Ran. She toted her head so high and pulled on the bits so heavy till finally at last the old man returned back home and took sick and went to bed.

One day I rid around by the Phillips place to find out if there was anything I could do for old man Ran, and who do you reckon was there—who but Blev Scroggins? When I started home Blev followed me out to the front gate lookin like as if he had somethin particular in his mouth to say.

"The hand of the affliction is restin on the old man mighty heavy right now, Rufe, but he will recover in the due fall of time," says Blev with that same slow wink and soft whistle.

Now you can't prove anything by me as to how it all come to pass. But on the third day after that old man Ran was up and about—spry and nectious and happy as any youngster in the country. And when Blev Scroggins rid by that night on his return back home, whistlin soft and low, he had the "deeds and titlements" to that 60 acres of swamp land—made out in his own full and proper name—put away in his inside breast pocket.

Now in conclusion you mought maybe love to know what ever went with old man Ran and the widder. Bless your sweet life, my honey dear, they got married, they did. With Blev out of the game it was easy as fallin off of a wet log for old man Ran to open the pot and take what was left. No doubts they have been happy henceforward from that day—old man Ran and his second wife—and may they linger yet through many years to come in the land of their fathers.

But in the meantime human nature is human still, and Blev Scroggins and that 60 acres of swamp land aint gone nowhere.

A Strange Legacy.

An original individual of Mons, who, during his lifetime was fond of good living, has just died leaving a legacy of 2600 to five friends under the following extraordinary conditions: The legacy must be spent on dinners served in different restaurants, and the deceased had stipulated that at each meal a certain special dish and a particular wine, of which he was very fond, shall be served, and that at dessert his memory shall be drunk. Furthermore, the five companions must dine in black clothes and black gloves, and must enter the dining-room preceded by a flag and the music of an accordion. The first dinner took place at Brussels recently, and the injunctions were carried out to the letter. Of the five friends, two are from Brussels, one from Antwerp, one from Mons, and one from Charleroi.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Demand for Copper.

No metal is increasing in importance more rapidly throughout the world than copper. Half of the copper mined is produced in this country, the total output in the United States last year reaching 47,722,560 pounds, a little more than half of which was exported. Our copper yield is now 40 per cent. larger than that of the world in 1881. The increased demand for the metal is due to electrical appliances.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—The late "Oliver Optic" once wrote a play for his son-in-law, Sol Smith Russell, but it didn't seem to strike the popular fancy.

—Among the new chevaliers of the Legion of Honor are two Americans, W. T. Donnat, the painter, and John Wamaker's son, Rodman.

—John Biddulph Martin, the London banker who married Mrs. Victoria Woodhull, died lately at Las Palmas, in the Canary isles, of pneumonia.

—Princess Marie von Hohenlohe, wife of the imperial chancellor of Germany, performed the notable feat of killing a bear while hunting on her estates in Russia. The princess is 68 years old.

—Mr. Hanna has more mail than any other two men in congress, and he never receives a letter that is not answered courteously, concisely and completely. Mr. Hanna's mail is averaging considerably over 200 letters a day.

—Isosce Conkling Bruce, son of ex-Senator Blanche K. Bruce, of Mississippi, is a student at Phillips Exeter academy, in New Hampshire, and made a striking impression in the chapel the other day by his rendering of Blaine's oration on Garfield.

A WONDERFUL HOLE.

Torrents of Sea Water Have Gone Into It in Years Past.

On the coast of the Greek island of Cephalonia, near the town of Argostoli, there are two little flumes, or canals, leading inland from the sea to the distance of about 100 feet, and then discharging their contents into rudely excavated pits, through whose badly fissured, rocky bottoms the water immediately loses itself. At least as long ago as 1835 a mill was run by power from one of these flumes; and a second mill was built beside and operated by the other a little while afterward. The mills themselves are now in ruins, but the flow continues. This remarkable state of things has existed for over 60 years, and very likely for a century.

One cannot help asking in amazement where all that water goes to. The Messrs. Crosby, who furnish the account estimate that the flow in each canal amounts to 1,000 cubic feet per minute, or 3,000,000 cubic feet per day in both. Two smaller passages of a similar character have been observed in the same neighborhood; and it is added that along the shore, "at all points between the two mills, and for an unknown distance beyond each, the water is everywhere percolating through cracks and fissures of the limestone and sinking into the earth. The openings in the sea bottom are, no doubt, mainly closed by weeds and gravel; yet no inconsiderable amount of water must find its way to these mysterious depths through such an extent of beach, lying on a rock that is practically as porous as a sieve."

* * * It is difficult to decide which is the greatest marvel, the sea mills themselves or the fact that they have remained practically unknown to the scientific world up to the present day, although described by several authors, mentioned in the guide books and visited by admirals, generals, bishops and distinguished civilians."

Almost the only explanation hitherto offered assumes that evaporation goes on rapidly in some subterranean cavern, and thus disposes of the water. But as it is admitted that the remaining salt from the two mill streams alone would amount to 48,600 feet a year, it is hard to understand why the subterranean cavern (if there be one) does not fill up. The Messrs. Crosby offer a different hypothesis. They ask the readers to imagine two great fissures descending into the earth and meeting below, like the sides of a letter V or U. Then they suggest that perhaps one arm is shorter than the other, and that there is a long, very gently rising passage leading from the bottom of the one to the bottom of the other, so that the subterranean heat can get a good chance to act on any stream passing through it. It then becomes easy to suppose that a cold current of sea water comes down through one branch of the system and forces upward through the other by thermal influences.

The rocky island of Cephalonia, like some of its neighbors, betrays the effect of earthquakes innumerable in times past, abounding in fractures and faults, caverns and subterranean rivers. None of the springs of Cephalonia contain any large quantity of salt, however, and it is difficult to regard any of them as the outflow of the flood which disappears at Argostoli. But it is possible that, as Alpheus is said to have done, it takes a dive beneath the sea and comes up on some far-off island.—Cassier's Magazine.

No Weakness on Her Part.

The president of the Neurosis society of Seaside's Siding was visibly agitated. So was the secretary.

"Mrs. Nimbletong, who was to deliver the address at to-day's meeting, cannot be present," said the former.

"Why not?" asked the latter.

The Difference.

The veteran actor said: "Oh, yes, indeed, you certainly are quite mistaken in thinking there is no practical difference between the romantic drama and the realistic drama. Yes, now, to illustrate, I have been here in both, and in both have I gathered the heroine to my bosom. In the romantic drama a celluloid bosom went; in the realistic drama nothing but linen would go for a minute."—Detroit Journal.

MANY MERCHANTS SUE.

Users and Selling Agents of Imperial Cash Registers Brought Into Court.

Brooklyn, N. Y., April 15.—Suit has been filed in the United States Circuit Court here, against Edward Egge, a well-known butcher at 505 Wythe Avenue, this city, by The National Cash Register Company, of Dayton, Ohio, asking for an injunction and damages.

Mr. Egge uses an Imperial Cash Register, sometimes known as the Osborn, which is manufactured by the Osborn Cash Register Company, of Detroit, Michigan, and which The National Company claims infringes cash register patents owned by them.

Newton & Hickock, of Syracuse, New York, John A. Rosinbush, of Chicago, Illinois, F. W. Charles, of Denver, Colorado, and more than twenty other individuals and firms, who are either using or selling Imperial Cash Registers, have also been sued.

Vacation Days.

In the Lake Regions of Wisconsin, Northern Michigan, Minnesota, Iowa and South Dakota along the lines of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, are hundreds of charming localities prominently fitted for the vacation of every man, woman and child, or on near lakes which have not been fished out. These resorts range in variety from the "full dress for dinner" to the flannel shirt advantages for every man. Among the list are names familiar to many of our readers as the perfection of Northern summer resorts. Nearly all of the Wisconsin points of interest, and within short distance from Chicago or Milwaukee, and none of them are so far away from the "busy marts of civilization" that they cannot be reached in a few hours of travel, by frequent trains, over the finest roads in the Northwest—the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway. A Strong Point for the Winchester.

On times every break or wears out. Oftentimes a break can be repaired if the proper means are at hand. One of the many great advantages of using a Winchester make of rifle or repeating shot gun is that, if any part of the gun is broken, it can be easily replaced at a trifling cost. All Winchester guns are made by a system of interchangeable parts so that a part will fit any Winchester gun of like model. This permits the owner of a Winchester to renew any part of the gun without the aid of a gunmaker. Parts can be obtained through any gun dealer in the country. This feature alone should recommend strongly guns made by the Winchester Repeating Arms Co., New Haven, Ct. Send for their large illustrated catalogue free.

H. C. DUBOSE, EDITOR.
C. C. DUBOSE, PROPRIETOR.

COLUMBIANA, MAY 6, 1897.

THE ILLITERACY OF ALABAMA.

It is with a feeling of deepest regret that, in investigating the standing of our state along this most important of lines—education—we find that she stands third to the last in illiteracy. Have we not more ambition than to permit her to remain as such? Let us look for a moment at the vast resources of our state. There is not a state in the union whose climate and soil are better adapted to agriculture than is she. Her hills and mountains are filled with the richest and best minerals of all kinds. There is not a healthier spot on the globe than upon her soil; yet with these advantages which enable her to compete with any of her sister states she stands at the very foot in the most important of all steps toward her improvement. We greatly fear that most of her citizens imbibed the idea from her motto: "Here We Rest" that it is a place alone for rest—along this line, certainly. Alabama has produced some of as bright men as ever filled a position of trust and honor; and why, stimulated by the fact, that we have as good material as any state, do we not put forth more effort.

The greatest need of our state is a uniform system of public schools which can alone remedy this state of affairs. Our school system is a disgrace and is accountable for the existing ignorance. The system ought to be such as would give every boy and girl a common school education, and thus give them a fighting chance in life. As it is, our boys and girls are growing up in ignorance and superstition and, of course, cannot compete with the children of other states who are more highly favored. It seems not only a disgrace but a heinous sin not to change our legislation in this respect. Shall we doom the children of our state ever to be "hewers of wood and drawers of water," for the citizens of other states. Does it not touch your heart to the very core to travel about through our surrounding country and see the limited advantages of the children. What can be a more awful sight than to see bright, promising young men and women forever doomed to dwell in this deplorable condition. We feel utterly at sea in trying to picture this, the greatest need of Alabama, but would earnestly entreat that this subject be agitated throughout her entire bounds until her citizens shall be made to see and realize her condition and enact some legislation to remedy it.

The Savannah News publishes an interview with a Georgia ex-confederate, in which the latter asserts that Osman Pasha, the famous Turkish leader, was born and reared in Wytheville, Va., was a West Point graduate and afterward became a confederate soldier; that he deserted at the second battle of Bull Run and subsequently went to Egypt because of the disgrace attaching to him. There he distinguished himself as a fighter, and attracted the attention of the Sultan of Turkey. Some time during the seventies he left the service of the Khedive and joined the army of the Sultan. The Georgia man says that Osman Pasha's real name is Charles L. Crawford, and that he went to school with him.—Birmingham News.

The papers of yesterday were teeming with fearful reports from the great catastrophe in France Sunday night, in which a charitable bazaar in Paris, filled to overflowing with the elite of the place, suddenly became wrapped in flames, cremating many hundred people before they could escape. It is impossible to picture the horror of such a scene. To think of hundreds of people burned to death in a building before assistance could be rendered is too awful to contemplate. The whole country is in mourning over this deplorable accident.

Pittsburg, Penn., was visited by one of the most fearful fires on last Sunday night that has ever visited any of the larger cities; over three million dollars worth of property being destroyed. Most of the heaviest losers, however, were well covered by insurance, consequently it will only be a question of a few months when the ground that is now covered with debris and ruin, will be handsomely decorated with many large and commodious buildings.

On last Saturday the gates of the mammoth exposition in Nashville were thrown open to the world, many thousand people being present to witness it. Much money has been expended in the prosecution of this immense undertaking but it is believed it will prove, next to the World's fair in Chicago, the greatest thing of the kind ever held in America.

The anniversary meeting of the Shelby County Medical Society held in Calera Tuesday was said to have been a most excellent meeting. A majority of the doctors of the county were present and they read and discussed many matters of vital importance and interest to that body.

DEMOCRACY'S CONDITION.

From the Augusta Herald.

The address which ex-President Cleveland delivered before the Reform Club on last Saturday night undoubtedly marked an epoch in the history of that true democracy, disorganized but vigorous and defiant, which demanded that the growing commerce of this country shall be conducted on the basis of an honest currency. It was a clarion note in the hesitant hush of the vacillating thousands who cherish the magic name of democracy and yet love their country too well to deliver it over to dreamers and inflationists. It was a speech manly and vigorous enough in itself, but particularly so when viewed in the light of a temporizing Landrean policy. The great leader of true democracy did not hesitate to set his face against financial heresy. His keynote was "No compromise with dishonesty."

Since his speech was delivered there has been a rustling in the valley of dry bones. The loyal friends of a stable currency have taken heart, and in a number of cities, particularly in New York, there have been informal conferences for the purpose of discussing plans for a harmonious amalgamation of the friends of good finance. But out of it all nothing has resulted. No feasible plan for intelligent and effective organization has been presented. All is chaotic. All are agreed upon the end to be accomplished, but there is no one to suggest the means.

The fact that the party which now parades the banner of democracy is in the legitimate line of succession can be questioned only when we remember that the seating of Michigan's silver delegates to the national convention, who turned the scale, were irregularly seated. And yet on that very point there arises an issue which, like the celebrated ghost, will not "down." At least the question of irregularity is involved in so much doubt that sound money democrats all over the country will easily make peace with their conscience and repudiate the mongrel crew who,

"Changing the spirit and not the letter, Have wed for worse and not for better."

And yet out of this chaos order must come. The present administration is well along in its course. Before it expires there must be a solid phalanx to confront it. The supremacy of republicanism is due, not to any sincere devotion to sound money, on the part of republicans, but to the acuteness which discerned the zeitgeist—the spirit of the times and rode in to victory on the crest of the waves. On the policy of protection, recent legislation has shown that Ephraim is joined to his idols, and this policy the South cannot endorse—in spite of the menace of Egyptian cotton.

The disorganized forces of democracy must be gathered about the banner of stability and conservatism. We want an ark of the covenant. Time and opportunity will present the man—the Moses who shall lead the persecuted hosts out of the wilderness. But as yet, there has been neither ark nor covenant. Whence shall it come? The whole country is awaiting the hour when both the name and the substance of true democracy shall rise to confront the common enemy.

THE STATE FINANCES.

From the Mobile Register.

A statement of the condition of the State's finances was given out at Montgomery by the auditor on Saturday. We suppose that Mr. White is to be congratulated on having shown that the State is much worse off financially than any one had any idea it was. For some reason that we do not clearly understand and do not attempt to fathom, the present administration wishes to make the deficit appear as large as possible. Well, the auditor has succeeded in figuring it up to $621,000. This ought to be enough to satisfy any reasonable man.

We trust that Mr. White will now rest content. People have different ideas about these things, and there may be some who do not think a big deficit greatly to the credit of the State. In fact, there are people who believe that it is best for the auditor's office to be conducted entirely divorced from political discussions or political aspirations.

But men who hold these views are not up to date, and don't understand that figures and everything else nowadays must be in strict subordination to party and governmental authority. It is said that figures do not lie, and no doubt this is the case with the auditor's figures, but we believe that in a number of instances they have anticipated the truth.

We are pleased that the auditor draws from his figures the moral that the most rigid economy in expenditures must be practiced. We would have been better pleased if more stress had been laid upon the necessity for such a course before the legislature increased appropriations more than $169,000. There is very little use looking the stable after the horse has got out.

BACK TAX LAW.

The Montgomery Journal has the following to say of the report of Auditor White, published elsewhere, relative to the workings of the back tax law:

The Journal is indebted to State Auditor White for a statement showing the workings of the back tax commission law. The first results of the back tax commission are gratifying and promise to greatly relieve the state treasury from the embarrassment which has been hovering over it for the past four years. It is evident even now, that the state will be greatly benefitted by the law.

During the month of March the tax commissioners of Colbert, Lauderdale and Madison counties, assessed a total value of $1,267,667. These are about three average counties in the state, and what was done in these may yet be done in others. There was collected and paid into the state treasury on account of assessment and back tax law during the month of March in the counties of Bibb, Lee, Morgan and Tuscaloosa, $1,047,50. The commission was not fully organized during that month, and no assessments were made or collected in the foregoing counties. There is a better organization of the commission now and a great deal better work may be expected for April. There are several large amounts of back taxes now in process of settlement.

There are hundreds and hundreds of people throughout this country who seem to rely on legislation for nearly everything, apparently forgetting, or not thinking that, upon the "man depends success." They, instead of putting their shoulders to the wheel or their hands to the plow, go about the land complaining of congress, state legislatures, public officials, and in short, all things else, simply because a wave of prosperity is withheld from them—when, in fact, they are really in better conditions than ever known by them before; but because they do not grow rich, and this through their own negligence and extravagance they give so much thought to "hard times" that they believe themselves next to veritable paupers. This is a work of imagination—and what is it imagination will not do for a man. These statements do not overdraw in the slightest the conditions which surround some people who have brought upon themselves a state of miserable existence through their imagination, when nothing around them justifies so deplorable a state. The sooner such persons realize that legislation is not to fill their pockets with cash, the sooner will an era of prosperity reign.—Union Springs Herald.

Vandiver Locals.

We had a nice rain last week which caused a few days delay in farm work, but it is again resumed with renewed energy.

Judging from the amount of fertilizer hauled away from our town the farmers are expecting to reap an abundant harvest of 5-cent cotton; and judging from the amount of dry goods and provisions hauled away from the store of Adams, Wilder & Co., there will be sufficient amount of cotton and other produce shipped from this point to justify the C. & W. railroad to give us a depot at this place. Can't we all as farmers, lumbermen, merchants, etc., come together and have a nice depot erected here.

Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather Saturday, May 1st, about three hundred people met at the cemetery for the purpose of decorating the graves in memory of the dead. The services were as customary at memorials, with appropriate addresses by Rev. W. I. Brasher, pastor of church; Rev. Johnston, of Leeds, and others.

Miss Sallie Hurst, one of Leeds' charming young ladies, attended services Saturday, remaining over with the family of J. P. Kinnett until Sunday afternoon, and attending divine service at Sterrett, accompanied by A. C. Wilder.

Mr. Rich, of Vincent, came up Saturday to attend services. Listen for the wedding bells next fall.

The musical at W. H. O'Harr's Saturday night was largely attended and enjoyed by all. The young people also enjoyed a singing at Esq. Vandiver's Sunday night, the music conducted by Miss Lela Kendrick.

The Bicycle.

From the Memphis Commercial-Appeal.

At a meeting of one of the large religious bodies recently in New York, the bicycle question was discussed at great length. To ride a wheel on Sunday was declared by some of the delegates to be a sin against high heaven. There were others who thought a wheel might be ridden on Sunday, providing it was not done for mere pleasure, or that it was used as a means of getting to and from church or for purposes of health, or to be used on charitable or philanthropic missions. The third element argued with much force and enthusiasm that the bicycle carried people beyond the seductive influences of many of the snares and delusions that are set for the feet of the unwary. They went on to show that riding a bicycle necessarily meant out-of-door exercise; that it brought people in touch with nature and removed them from the debasing influences of sedentary life as found in the cities. The arguments were interesting, but without visible influence, and no general conclusion seems to have been reached.

As in many other instances, the advocates of the several theories expressed their opinions without influencing those who differed from them. A bicycle can not well carry a person anywhere unless the person carried directs the course of the vehicle. It is with the rider, therefore, to say whether the route taken shall lead to vice or virtue. The wheel is merely an innocent means of getting speedily from one place to another with less exertion and with greater pleasure than by walking. The rider must guide, and he is responsible for the course taken.

A Letter From Florida.

CARYVILLE FLA., April 28, 1897.

MR. EDITOR:—I will endeavor to write you a few lines from your valuable paper as you rarely print anything from this part of the country. I shall try to give some idea of this state as to its many advantages and important industries, but first would say that I am from Shelby county, Alabama, and can truthfully say that she is hard to beat, yet for my own part I prefer Florida. This is a great lumber and turpentine producing state, also famous for its fruit and fisheries, for which it is the most noted in the union. It excels most of the southern states for game, such as bear, deer, turkeys, alligators, squirrels and all manner of sea birds, and for sport it cannot be excelled. As to its healthful qualities it can also compete with any state. The water, as a matter of course, is warm but it is not near so disagreeable here as many imagine as the sea breeze from the gulf keeps it fairly pleasant all summer. I have been unusually highly favored since my sojourn here, not being sick a day and having lived here since last August.

If this is so fortunate as to escape the waste basket I may in future write again. With best wishes to all The Chronicle readers I am

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dimendale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitancy in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church, at Rives' Junction, she was brought down with Pneumonia succeeding La Grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption, and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." This bottle is free at Parker & Armstrong's drug store. Regular size 50c and $1.00.

On last Sunday a new schedule took effect on the Southern Railway in which the northbound passenger train will pass at 11:25 and the southbound at 1:18. We would prefer to have the trains pass further apart here but rather than enter a protest and break it up, we decided to submit quietly.

gret to see him leave, but wish him all the success possible in whatever he may undertake in future.

Tuesday morning at the hour of 8 Mr. F. A. Nelson, Sr., one of Columbiana's oldest and most highly respected citizens, passed into eternity. In his death the family have lost a true and devoted father and the community an honest and upright man. His obituary will follow in our next issue.

One night last week two of our young gentlemen hired a team from the livery stable here and drove over to call on some young ladies at Shelby. Upon returning to where they had left their horse they found him removed and hitched at another place and almost dead from exhaustion. The fact that he had been left tied with a hitch rein and afterwards found at a different place hitched by one of the lines and the whip gone proves conclusively he had been fearfully driven in their absence. We cannot condemn in strong enough terms such ungentlemanly conduct; it is too mean and contemptible to be worthy of a gentleman. We would ask those guilty of this mischief, if they bear any animosity against our boys, to see them in person and not resort to such means of recking their vengeance.

Public Installation of Officers.

It is the intention of Central Lodge No. 70, A. F. & A. M., Montevallo, to have public installation of its officers, together with all of the various lodges who attend and take part in the services, at Montevallo, on the 24th day of June 1897, when we hope to have Hon. J. A. Billro, grand master of the Grand Lodge of Alabama, and Dr. Robert Cunningham, late grand senior warde of the Grand Lodge of Alabama, to deliver addresses and install officers. In addition to this, we wish to have a basket dinner. We invite all lodges who will join us to correspond with us, so that we may know in advance how many lodges will take part in the celebration. The public generally are cordially invited to attend. The arrangements have not yet been fully consummated, but we hope that we will be able to give definite notice by the 1st day of June, or perhaps sooner, through the newspapers of this and adjoining counties. J. M. REYNOLDS and F. F. CROWE, Committee.

Notice to the Citizens.

The work on the cemetery in Columbiana not having been quite completed, it has been decided to appoint another day for the gathering of the good citizens, both white and colored, of our town on Friday, May 21st, to complete this work. To those who have hitherto been uninterested in this undertaking we would invite to go up and see the great change that was effected in the appearance of our cemetery in only a short time. On last Thursday, Friday and Saturday most every citizen of our town was either present or represented and worked with a vim and determination which was highly commendable, and we are sure they are now truly gratified with the result. It is now necessary to do only a little more work and we will have one of the prettiest cemeteries in the county; and surely this ambition is not an unwholy one, for in it we alone show how greatly we reverence, love and respect the memory of our departed ones. So let us on this date assemble with suitable tools for the occasion and finish this noble work, and in after years we will look back upon these efforts as among the best we had ever expended.

In Memoriam.

On Saturday afternoon, just as the last rays of the setting sun were being gathered in and the evening twilight begun, the sweet spirit of little Huston Longshore passed away. His death being so sudden made it doubly painful. He was only taken sick on Friday, the day before, but not considered dangerously ill until Saturday afternoon, when medical assistance was called, but proved utterly useless. By the combined efforts of his physician and a few friends everything in their power was done to restore him, but everything failed. Although this sweet bud of life was nipped when he was yet quite young—only 11 years of age—he had developed a beautiful and noble character. By his respectful and obedient conduct to his parents, his kind and loving disposition before all his associates and friends, he had endeared himself to the hearts of everyone, and his untimely death is universally mourned. His funeral services were conducted at the Baptist church Sunday afternoon by Rev. W. I. Sinnott. We offer our deepest sympathy to this bereaved family in their sore affliction.

We were requested to publish the following resolutions adopted by the school:

WHEREAS, It has pleased our Heavenly Father to remove from our midst one of our number, we bow submissively to His will. We will ever remember his studious habits in the school room, his kind manners and agreeable conduct toward schoolmates and teachers.

RESOLVED, That we drape his desk in mourning and keep flowers on the same until school shall close.

RESOLVED, That we extend our sympathy to the bereaved parents, grand parents, brothers and sisters, and point them to God, who is their only source of comfort.

LOW RATE EXCURSION

To the Barnum & Bailey Greatest Show on Earth.

When the Barnum & Bailey circus exhibits at Birmingham, May 22, it will doubtless be attended by the largest crowd of people that ever attended a circus performance in this vicinity. The railroads realizing this fact, have quoted a very low rate from all stations, and in some instances will run special trains to accommodate the extra traffic. There is nothing that draws the people like a circus, and no circus that draws like Barnum & Bailey America's foremost amusement enterprise, which is, this year, conceded to be of such mammoth proportions that it has surpassed even its own superior reputation of the past and set a new pace for others to follow. Among the many startling features are seventy horses performing in one ring, a dog that plays football, a pig that actually talks so you can distinguish its words. Miss Ella Ewing, the tallest person in the world, over eight feet high. Great Peter, the smallest man in the world, 17 years old and weighing only six and a half pounds. Over a dozen champion riders including all the greatest, a herd of performing elephants, and all the big aerial acts, including the little girl who is shot from an arrow sixty feet through mid-air. In addition, the Barnum & Bailey show possesses the finest menagerie on earth, and over 400 horses of the finest breed.

Harpersville Echoes.

There was frost here Sunday morning and vegetation looks sick.

J. P. Rowe paid Childersburg a business trip last Saturday.

Miss Mattie Worsham, of Irondale, who has been visiting the Misses Wallace returned home last week.

Jim Carden, of The Chronicle force, came home last week to spend a while with his father's family.

A. A. Gorman, of East Lake, is stopping at Harpersville now, taking in its beauty and surroundings.

Joe Simmons has got him a soft, easy, light, heavy job now at Warren's sawmill.

Mrs. George Jones, a very estimable lady living on Spring Creek four miles north of here, died last Friday. She leaves a husband and several children and an aged mother, besides a host of friends and relatives to mourn her loss. To the bereaved ones we extend our sympathy.

Prof. Strock is visiting East Lake.

Mrs. T. G. Florey and Miss Mattie Kidd spent the most of last week with their aunt, Mrs. W. L. Davis, at Columbiana.

We were very sorry that E. Williamson, of Wilsonville, did not connect Harpersville and Wilsonville by telephone which he spoke of doing in the winter. I understand that he was on a quandary for sometime, which to do, build a telephone line or take a wife, and as he decided on the latter let me congratulate him on his good judgment and we will look for the "phone" later on.

Captain E. T. Hunter, of Columbiana, president of the Shelby county horse, mule, cow, sheep, goat, dog and cat swappers association, was in our community a few days ago accompanied by Mr. Mason, of Four Mile, selling sewing machines. The man that talks the more in a horse trade than President Hunter will have to grease his tongue three or four times a day with axle grease and take an extra meat skin along in his vest pocket.

Misses Virginia and Eula Mallory, also their brother, Frank, who have most always lived with their uncle, W. W. Wallace, left here last week to live with their father in Dallas, Texas. We regret very much to see these young people leave Harpersville but hope that they will be pleased in their new home.

Rev. W. J. Ray will preach at the Baptist church Sunday evening at half-past 2 o'clock.

Rev. W. S. Henderson left here last week to try his fortune in Texas. Our best wishes for his future welfare go with him. JAKE.

Saginaw Drop Shots.

J. P. Smitherman, our clever night watchman, is in Centreville attending court this week.

A. M. Piper is very sick at this writing.

A goodly number of our people attended church at Elliottsville Sunday. J. R. Wagoner and wife visited relatives in the Yellow Leaf neighborhood Saturday and Sunday.

We are glad to note that Mrs. Wm. Galoway has improved very much since last week.

Miss Mattie Lanier has been slightly indisposed for the last few days.

Mrs. B. H. Satterwhite, accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. Ella Reed, are visiting relatives and friends in Jemison.

Mr. Wells, of Montevallo, is visiting his brother, W. E. Wells, of this place. PETER.

For facial neuralgia this is the very best plan to secure quick relief: Heat a freestone hot and roll up in a cloth, wetting one side of it and turning about a teaspoonful of essence of peppermint on the wet surface. Lay the face against this and cover the whole head up warmly with flannel. It will give relief in almost every instance. Or heat a basin of salt very hot, put it in a bag and apply to the face. There is something about the salt that seems to relieve the pain where simply the heat will not help it.

Don't kick a man because he is down. Many a good man has been downed by adverse circumstances and driven to despair because everybody seemed anxious to kick him while he is down, when a little encouragement and a little help would have made a better man of him than ever he was before.—Augusta Tribune.

Electric Bitters.

Electric Bitters is a medicine suited for any season, but perhaps more generally needed, when the languid exhausted feeling prevails, when the liver is torpid and sluggish and the need of a tonic and alternative is felt. A prompt use of this medicine has often averted long and perhaps fatal bilious fevers. No medicine will act more surely in counteracting and freeing the system from the malarial poison. Headache, indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness yield to Electric Bitters. 50c and $1.00 per bottle at Parker & Armstrong's Drug Store.

"I have called," said the confident young man with manuscript sticking out of his pocket, "to see whether there is a vacancy in this office."

The Best Remedy for Rheumatism.

From the Fairview (N. Y.) Register.

Mr. James Rowland of this village, states that for twenty-five years his wife has been a sufferer from rheumatism. A few nights ago she was in such pain that she was nearly crazy. She sent Mr. Rowland for the doctor, but he had read of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and instead of going for the physician he went to the store and secured a bottle of it. His wife did not approve of Mr. Rowland's purchase at first, but nevertheless applied the balm thoroughly and in an hour's time was able to go to sleep. She now applies it whenever she feels an ache or a pain and finds that it always gives relief. He says that no medicine which she had used ever did her as much good. 1897.

It appearing that Anna Seale, alias Anna Seales, alias Anna F. Success and Its Cause.

The phenomenal popularity of the guns and ammunition made by the Winchester Repeating Arms Co., New Haven, Ct., is not surprising when the great pains and care taken by this celebrated house to put nothing but perfect goods on the market is considered. Every gun they make is tested for strength, action and accuracy and unless it comes up to the high Winchester standard it never leaves the factory. Winchester ammunition is made with equal care, every different cartridge or load being tested before it is loaded for market. Winchester guns and ammunition are unsurpassed as results show. SOME TEXAS STORIES.

The Sage of Rocky Creek Has Been About.

Wrong Man Put Off at Ardmore—When the Air Was Hot in the "Wet or Dry" Campaign.

Onct upon a time out there in Texas, when the famous wet or dry election was on hand and they had the pot bilin' high and hot — when every man had to pick his flag and line up with one side or the other — when political excitement was so tremendous as to make heavy thick and heavy till by gracious you could hit it with a stick or rake it up with a splinter—in them days it come to pass that I was on the railroad train one night goin' up across the Red river and into the Indian territory. When the train slowed up at the last station on the Texas side of the river a strapping big fellow got on board.

You could look at the gentleman from Texas with one eye set and see that he was most unconstitutionally and serenely drunk. His eyes looked like new money, and every side of the car was his. He was steppin' as high and awkward as a blind steer calf in tall oats, and sweatin' like a free nigger on election day. He called the colored individual which seemed to be managing the passengers and the train and everything in sight, and went on to say: "Ain't you the porter of this car?"

"Dat's me to a dead immortal certainty, boss," says the porter.

"Well, you will please take due and proper notice that I am on my way to Ardmore and as drunk as seven fools in one bunch," says the gentleman from Texas.

"I reserve the general calamity of the surroundings, boss," says the porter, and with that he bowed several low bows and a couple of duets for the pleasure of the passengers.

"Put me off at Ardmore," the Texas man went on. "I am tired now and sleepy too. Put me off at Ardmore. Ily that time I will be dreamin about the election and sleepin the sleep of the just. But put me off at Ardmore. I maybe might not want to get off, but that don't make a continental durm bit of difference. You put me off at Ardmore. Here is one dollar in clean, cold cash."

"Tis the last silver dollar I had, sir," said the porter.

"All her sixteen companions are squandered and gone," "Remember what I say, and put me off at Ardmore, for if you don't there will be a third-class funeral somewhere along the line of this railroad before the sun goes down behind the western hills to-morrow."

"With the greatest of incongruity I will put you off at Ardmore, boss, if it brings on another war and breaks up the plans of salvation," says the porter, as that "last silver dollar" rattled down into his flank pocket.

And then, in less than three minutes, the gentleman from Texas and everybody on the car but the conductor and porter had went sound to sleep. Twenty-six miles beyond Ardmore everybody woke up all of a sudden like. The gentleman from Texas had caught the porter and was now makin the native night air hot in great streaks and patches and blue in spots as big as a horse blanket.

"You infernal slow-footed, box-ankled, tangly-haired, black rascal!—didn't I tell you to put me off at Ardmore?" "Blessed Moses and de angels! Is dat you, boss?" says the porter, and his eyes bulged out as big as two saucers.

"Fore God, boss—didn't I put you off at Ardmore? Maybe I must of woke up de wrong man, but I found him in de next car, and bless de heavens if I didn't think it was you. He was sleep, and he was superly drunk. He was from Texas, and he wanted to bet on de election. He bucked and he kicked, and he pitched and he cussed and fit till it was plain scandalous, but I put him off at Ardmore, like I was told. Look at my clothes, boss—fore to me baby duds and old rags—and my face so bad scratched and bunged up till they won't know my wife's husband from any common nigger in town when I git home. Ise mighty sad and sorry, boss, and I will give you back your dollar with my double-breasted compliments. But if I didn't put a white man off at Ardmore creation has jumped a cog and the nigger never was set free."

At the next station the gentleman from Texas changed cars to return back to Ardmore, whilst the porter proceeded to manage the train to the best of his ability.

Keeping on Safe Grounds.

On that same Texas trip I went to see Buck Ridgeway and his folks down in the Hood county—which they use to live in the old Panther Creek settlement and went west ten or fifteen years ago.

One day me and Buck went to the town, and, as I said before, the native air was hot with the wet or dry question. The election was comin' off in about two weeks, and the people had got worked up by this time to that pass where they would bet and cuss and fight about it.

Now in the main time Buck Ridgeway is one of the most peaceablest men I have ever saw, and up to that day he never had showed his hand in the fight to any serious extent. He was raley on the wet side, but he didn't give out his opinions with a dinner horn and from the house, as it were. You see, Buck had already fit plum through one war and got his horse killed at Seven Pines, and henceforward after that he was for peace on earth and good will to the whole entire created human race.

It was funny to me the way Buck would slide over the great question of the day and make it around safe to the home base every time. In town that day a long, tall, red-headed man walked up to me and Buck and shook his fist in Buck's face.

"Wet or dry—which?" says the long, tall man.

"That is the mainest question," says Buck. "But now, stranger, dadblame it, you say first."

Naturally, of course, when the stranger said, and then Buck he said, it come to pass that both of them had said the same thing. And the white flag of peace still waved in triumph over the broad and fertile bosom of the land which the Indians and the buffalo had left them.

A Time of Year to Cuss.

On horseback and riding across the piney woods country of east Texas—where they have red hills and sandhills and shade trees and spring branches and poor land and good water in the greatest plenty—everything was so natural and homely looking till it was a most magnolious and happy day to me. Soon that mornin, when I rid out of the broad, bleak prairies and struck a rale skirt of woods for the first time in three months—man sir, I was so tremendous glad till I didn't dismount and git down and bug a large and lovely pine tree.

Late along in the shank of the evenin I rid up in sight of a settlement with a double pen log house. A man come tearin out of the clearin and hailed me in the big road.

"Don't you want a job, stranger?" says he, talkin fast and excited like. "I am willin to pay you anything in reason—whatever thought be right for your time and trouble, and if you are a rale peart hand at the business you can soon turn off the job."

"I am a stranger in a strange land, with a long road ahead and no money to mention, and I wouldn't mind turnin a few honest plunkers if it come handy," says I.

"How are you on cussin?" says he. "Only a very few," says I. "At home they tell it around that I am the most handiest man in the settlement. But to speak the plain Bible truth, I am somewhat ruther awkward and nothin to brag on when it comes to cussin."

"Then you ain't the man I am looking for. What I want and what I need most hellacious bad at this particular time of year is a man that has been fetched up cussin and trained for the business—a man that can cuss in all the latest fashions and fling in the hot stuff thick and fast and furious. I am what you might call a right tolerable good hand at cussin my own rusty self, but the terrible circumference of the present calamity is just simply too much for me. I can't sorter half-way do the subject justice. I would love the best in the world to hire a good, swift hand at the business and give him the job."

"Maybe it ain't none of my business, but what seems to be the trouble?" says I.

"Nobody knows what trouble is but me, stranger," the man responded back as the sun went down behind a heavy bank of clouds. "Only last week some ugly scoundrel beast put out pizen and killed my three hound dogs—the finest and the fastest that ever followed a trail in the lone state of Texas. Night before last my mule took sick and died, and right on top of that my old woman took and sloped off this mornin and run away with a foot peddler. So here I am—with my dogs and my mule dead, and the old woman gone—with seven children and four cows, and nobody to do a darn thing—troubles on top of troubles—troubles comin in great chunks and gobs and slices. If I could but only find the right man to take hold and cuss out the human race, and cuss out creation in general, seems to me like I might feel a whole lot better. I have tried my hand faithful but hit the high places, and scorched the air about in patches. But a plain, blunt man like me is as helpless as a baby under the sad surroundings of the present case."

What did I do? What could I do? Nothin much to speak of. I told the onhappy man to brace up as best he could and wait till the clouds rolled by. Then I rid on and left him alone in his troubles.

All the Same in Texas.

The railroad men and the drummers in Texas told me that there was three places of a kind out there—Hempstead, Hearne and H—I. I went to Hempstead and stopped at Hearne. To my notions they are both good towns, with plenty of good people livin there. But the railroad men and the drummers held it to it that as between the three places it was six with one and half a dozen with the other two.

One night I took the railroad train at Hearne and started up the country. A young man likewise also got on board, which from general appearances had climbed up around various and sundry drunks. Anybody could tell that he would need a jug before he could take any more. When the train pulled out the young man was fast asleep. The conductor come around presently and tried to wake him up, but it was all vanity and vexation. By-and-by, when the train had run some 40 or 50 miles, the young man responded slightly to the shakin and woke up in a measure.

"Give me your ticket," says the conductor.

"Ain't got no ticket," says the young man.

"Well, where do you suppose you are going?" says the conductor.

"Goin to H—I," says the young man, only he spoke out in full.

"That is perfectly all right," says the conductor. "We have done passed Hempstead, but I will put you off at Hearne."

Denmark's Magnetite Island.

No such mountain really exists as is described in the Arabian Nights story, where all ships within reach of its influence are drawn irresistibly toward it and the nails extracted by its magnetic power. Still, there is some foundation for the fairy tale. In the Baltic there is an island belonging to Denmark, called Bornholm. It consists almost entirely of magnetite. It is much dreaded by navigators because it renders steering a ship by means of a needle impossible. This influence is felt miles away, and as soon as the island is sighted all mariners on the Baltic turn to lighthouses and other well-known helps to direct their course. Between Bornholm and the mainland there is a constantly submerged and very dangerous bank of rock, on which many vessels have been wrecked. This ore bank is so magnetic that if a magnetic needle is freely suspended in a boat passing over it, and undisturbed, it will remain in a perfectly perpendicular line.

WHEN DOCTORS DIFFER WHO SHALL DECIDE?

History of a Woman Who Could Not Walk for Six Years.

From the Palladium, Richmond, Ind.

Miss T. E. Osborne is the name of a young lady living at 126 North Seventeenth Street, Richmond, Ind. She is the daughter of Mr. William Osborne, one of the most prominent horsemen in Eastern Indiana.

She told her reporter a most interesting story. "I will interest physicians as it was a most unusual case, and to the various ones who treated her, diagnosed it differently.

"None of them, and I tried all of them," said Mrs. Osborne, "knew what was the matter with me. Some said I had rheumatism, while others frankly admitted that they did not know. I was at first taken with pneumonia. One of my feet pained me almost constantly, then the doctors pronounced it rheumatism."

"Gradually, but steadily the trouble grew and spread until my entire body was involved and I was utterly helpless. Then we changed doctors. No relief came, and we changed again. We tried nearly all of the local remedies, but to no avail. I was at last declared that I never could walk again. I had no longer any faith in any doctor or any remedy."

Finally, after persistent effort her friends induced her to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, but against her will, for she was discouraged. She says of the results: "I noticed no change after taking the first box or so, but they asked me to give the physician a fair trial, so they kept on prescribing it."

"I took no other at the time, so that if any good were to come we would know what had brought it about. I gave worse and worse, and I suffered much less. At the end of three months I found that I could move my limbs, and I felt myself up, and, as I was longer helpless, I kept on and still refrained from every sort of medicine."

"In one year from the time I began the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People I could walk and something like the doctors had decided I never could do again."

"At first, having been helpless for so long I could not trust myself to walk on the street, as I felt afraid. Soon, however, I grew more confident, and walked everywhere as well as ever, and have been doing so ever since. I took the pills for two years, and I was afraid to stop until I was sure the cure was complete. Before I took them I was weak, and now my general health is very good."

Miss Osborne was repeatedly questioned as to her opinion of what cure she had, and she has often declared it to have been Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, as she had been growing steadily worse until she had no more faith in anything but the medicine she had been taking.

Druggists in Richmond now have a large sale of these pills, and it is a frequent occurrence to have a customer ask for the medicine that cured Miss Osborne.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are not a patent medicine in the sense that name implies. They were first compounded as a prescription and used such in general practice by an eminent physician. So great was their efficacy that it was deemed wise to place them within the reach of all. They are now manufactured by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., and are sold in boxes (never in loose form) by the dozen or hundred, and the public are cautioned against numerous imitations sold in this shape at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Med. Co.

It has been said that the conveniences of one age become the necessities of the next; that the necessities of one age should be the inconveniences of the next. When binding was done by hand the left hand cut the grain and the right hand bound the platform of the harvester and was delivered into the receiver with its heads towards the rear of the machine. The men stood in the receiver facing the grain. With the left hand machine the heads of the grain are at the left hand of the man doing the binding, so in taking out the bundle with the band around it, whether the man turned to the left or to the right, the band he kept his position toward the bundle itself—that is, with the heads toward his left hand; hence, in making the tuck he brought the heads of the grain toward his heads. Grain is handled by the shocher b grasping into the heads, as shown in the illustration, and the tuck should therefore be toward the heads, so that it will not pull out.

The hand binding harvester with men to do the binding is out of date, and so is the left hand machine, which has been superseded by the McCormick Right Hand Open Elevator, the success of which is patenting highly probable that there will be no progressive manufacturer building left hand machines in three years.

The application of roller bearings to grain cutting machinery was made by J. G. Perry in 1869, and his patent, No. 85,584, for an improved reaper, showed and described various rollers and rollers and bearings in harvesters. In view of these facts it is somewhat amusing to read the claims of a certain reaper maker of the present day, who says he was the first to introduce roller bearings in harvesting machinery. As a matter of fact this manufacturer is comparatively a beginner in the art of reaper building and has originated nothing.

Unquestionably the most practical and satisfactory application of roller bearings to binders and mowers has been made by the McCormick Harvesting Machine Company. The particular form used by them was patented in 1882 and is now to be found in all McCormick machines. The especially valuable feature of the McCormick roller bearing is seen in the form—or cage—as it is called—into which the rollers are run and held together, and for any cause the cage is taken from the shaft the rollers will not fall out and get lost. In order to avoid the McCormick rollers, the roller bearing machine company who claims to be the originator of roller bearings in harvesters has cut out the metal in the ring at the ends of the rollers. If the cage is taken out the rollers slip out and become filled with grit, or worse, get lost.

The methods of the McCormick Company result in an annual saving of many thousands of dollars to the farming public. New devices are not embodied in their machines until long and oft-repeated trials have shown them to be practical. It has been the same with the roller bearing as with everything else—McCormick experimenting is done at McCormick expense, and not at the expense of the farmers, who are too often duped by many of the rollers slip out and become filled with grit, or worse, get lost.

MUST KNOW THE STREAM.

The Information a Western River Pilot Has to Carry in His Head.

At the season of the year when the river excursion business is at its height and hundreds of boats are carrying thousands of people to and fro along the entire length of the Ohio river from Pittsburgh to Cairo, many persons who ordinarily never give the subject a thought are impressed with the wonderful way in which navigation on our beautiful stream is carried on. The first thing noticed generally is the accuracy with which the pilot handles the boat, avoiding the bars, which are near the surface of the water in the summer, going from one side of the river to the other, and, finally, without a jar, landing them all safely at their destination. When the excursion business is over these same men assume shabby positions on packets and tow boats carrying hundreds of tons of freight and thousands of bushels of coal on every trip with the same accuracy with which they handled the excursion steamers during the summer.

A large number of pilots running out of Cincinnati know the river from here to New Orleans, others from here to Memphis, and others still to points up the river as far as Pittsburgh. "Know the river," this phrase means much. For instance, a man running from here to New Orleans must be able to take charge of the wheel of his boat at any hour of the day or night at any point on the river and on any stage of water. He must be able to tell at a glance exactly where the boat is at any point on this long stretch of 1,513 miles. He must know every bend and chute, and by day the different points by which to steer, such as houses, barns, trees, fences and even haystacks; by night every light placed by the government in conspicuous places as well as the hills and their shape. He must know exactly how long to hold the boat to one light or object before changing to another. When the Mississippi river is reached a new feature presents itself in the shape of the constantly changing channel.

To work here requires more shrewd and greater judgment probably than all the rest of the difficulties combined. Going down a boat may go on one side of the river. Coming back it does not go within two miles of that place. When these things are appreciated and they are only a few of the things a pilot must know—then it is that the pilot gets credit for what he does.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

Buried After Two Centuries.

A singular case of most abnormally posthumous interment took place recently at Revel, a Russian town near the gulf of Finland. The body, or rather, mummy, thus tardily buried, was that of the Belgian soldier of fortune, Duc Charles de Croix, who had been commander in chief of the Russian army at the historic battle of Narva, in 1700. Made prisoner by the Swedes during the fight, De Croix took up his residence at Revel, where he died in the course of nature, his creditors, however, demurring to his burial until his debts had been paid in full. So the soldier was mummified and his remains have stayed ever since then in a Lutheran church, where they have been exhibited to sightseers as a curiosity. Now, at last, amid such pomp as that afforded by the presence of the local authorities, Duc Charles de Croix has been placed in a new coffin and properly interred in the vaults of this church, and thus ends as strange a chapter as the records of sepulture have ever contained.—London Sketch.

The Japanese Spaniel.

The most valuable of small dogs is the Japanese spaniel. A dog a year old, weighing 1½ pounds, is worth $200. The dogs seldom weigh less than 3½ pounds, but as they decrease in weight they increase in value. A three-pound spaniel is worth more than one weighing 3½ pounds, and one weighing 2½ or 2½ pounds very much more. Japanese spaniels have been sold for as much as $900. There are large Japanese spaniels that are not imported and have no special value; the small dogs are very rare and their rarity, doubtless, adds considerably to their value, but they are highly prized otherwise. They are good-natured, lively little creatures. Their markings are black and white, and yellow, and some dogs are marked with all three colors. The Japanese spaniel lives about ten years. — San Francisco Chronicle.

COLUMBIANA, MAY 20, 1897.

TO THE LADIES OF ALABAMA.

The following facts have been officially mentioned to me by General George Mooman, adjutant-general of the United Confederate Veterans:

1. There are 431 Alabama soldiers buried at Camp Chase, near Columbus, O., who died while in prison.

2. Rutherford B. Hayes, afterwards president of the United States, while governor of Ohio, caused the graves of these and all other Southern soldiers buried there, to be properly cared for at the expense of that State. In this noble work Governor Foraker followed his example.

3. Col. William H. Knauss, a gallant Union soldier, has had immediate control and direction of this generous work; has had a handsome stone wall erected around the cemetery, the graves marked as far as possible and beautified by flowers and shrubbery.

4. Colonel Knauss and his associates have set apart the fifth day of June next to be observed as memorial day for these Southern soldiers and for the decoration of their graves, and has suggested that the ladies of the South send flowers to him for that purpose.

These facts tell a patriotic story which I will not elaborate. But I do appeal to the daughters of Alabama to aid Colonel Knauss in his noble and patriotic work by sending flowers and garlands to be laid on the graves of Alabama's sons.

This can be done by writing to Colonel William H. Knauss, Columbus, O., who will without delay, give instruction how, when and where to ship them.

I respectfully suggest, however, that flowers shipped per express, from almost any railroad station in the State on the 30 day of June, will reach Columbus, O., in time to be used on the 5th of June.

Not doubting that this appeal will meet a cordial response from the ladies of the State, I leave the matter in their hands. F. S. FENOUSON, Major-General United Confederate Veterans.

May 13, 1897.

Sitting alone in my sunshiny sanatorium today, "a sweetly solemn thought comes to me o'er and o'er." I am thinking of our dead, and while the world goes on with its feasting and fasting, the beautiful custom of strewing the graves of the dead soldiery, North and South, with floral offerings should be everywhere observed.

The custom is a most holy and lovely one, and it should be perpetuated through all the years to come. I can conceive of nothing more Christian-like and ennobling to the finer feelings of human nature than this culling of flowers by matron and sire, youth and maiden, to strew over the green mounds and wreath about the marble columns that chronicle in enduring stone the bravery of those who fell discharging their duty to their country's flag and in defense of their national rights.

In by-gone times the Fourth of July and the 22nd of February were days anticipated long before their advent in every community in the States; (for in every one were descendants of those illustrious men who fought in the American revolution) anticipated as the days when orators would extol the chivalric deeds and the Spartan courage and daring of those who bore arms for seven long years, until the result desired was heroically attained, and as a rich heritage this vast country, replete with marvelous capabilities and wonderful resources, was left to their posterity.

And the celebration of the Fourth of July and the 22nd of February is a beautiful custom indissolubly associated with the names of America's noblest sons.

When we have summed up all that is attractive in the past to their heroic deeds we can trace the source of all of our present enjoyment. The United States of America are the achievements of the soldiers of 1776. Led by George Washington and imbued with patriotism and capable of long endurance, they finally wrenched independence from the British crown. War after war ensued, and as often as the tocsin sounded, victory perched upon our banner. And now, at last, after a fierce and bloody civil strife, when the flags of defiance are furled and the swords are left to rust in their scabbards, it is for the noble women of the country to strew flowers on the graves of our hero dead. It is a labor of love which should never be carelessly performed. Some day should be set apart with all due solemnity for the consecration of their last resting place, and orators should blend the blossoms of their heaven-born genius and eloquence with the brightness and sweetness of the earthly flowers in decorating and hallowing the graves of our dead and "gone before;" so perpetuate their memories, irrespective of the uniform they wore or the cause they espoused. All the rare and roseate loveliness nature affords should be combined until the many God's acres over our land should bloom in beauty like the rose of Sharon.

Floral offerings at the resting places of the dead is one of the most beautiful of customs, and it is fitting that the hand of women should evince this affection and respect for those who died in defense of them and their native land—who fought for principle and perished in their endeavor to uphold liberty. Let us scatter over their graves the fairest and sweetest flowers. Let us cherish the memory of them, and when we die let us leave it as a heritage to our children, which may not pass away while the light of reason shines and the soul aspires to a life that is purer and more ennobling than any this world affords.

A WOMAN OF THE SOUTH.

The Montgomery Advertiser is attempting to prove it is Democratic, and we are sorry to note that they resort to technicalities and hair-splitting to substantiate the assertion.

THE DUTY OF THE HOUR.

"Educate and inform the whole mass of the people. Enable them to see that it is to their interest to preserve peace and order and they will preserve them."

These words of Jefferson apply with striking force to the problem that confronts the southern men of today. I do not say "southern men" in a boastful spirit but simply to state a fact.

The late Dr. Bright in an editorial in a New York paper called the South "The home of conservatism and orthodoxy." Edward Bok calls it the "Heart of America."

Truly the foreign element is so large in the North, that, unless kept in check by the balance of power which the South holds, we may look for trouble in the future. In view of this, is not the education of the masses a political necessity? Educate the voter, and you will have sounded the death-knell of the demagogue and greatly weakened the power of the political trickster.

The average Alabamian is taxed now all he can bear. He is, and has been for years, fighting for life. Yet poverty has not weakened the minds of his children, but has strengthened their capacity for labor.

The legislature which inaugurates a plan that will solve this problem of education will have done the state a signal service. Alabama made a grand step forward when the Polytechnic Institute and the District Agricultural schools came into being. The idea is growing and there is light ahead.

Our University has a fine endowment, and that is well; but, alas! so few can share in its advantages. The common schools have the training of a large proportion of the boys who, in a few years, will hold in their hands the destinies of Alabama. MARAH.

TO OUR OLD CONFEDS.

Although we, together with the other papers of the county, have issued a call for a gathering of the old Confederate soldiers of Shelby county at this place some time in July, we feel that too much cannot be said in urging the importance and desirability of such a meeting.

There are many reasons why such a reunion will be beneficial: Firstly, you are rapidly losing sight of and interest in each other, which should never be; secondly, that true born Southern spirit which characterizes every Southern soldier and which led them to perform such deeds of chivalry and patriotism in the past, is rapidly dying out and being replaced by a feeling "that what is should be," and thirdly, it will greatly assist in putting down partisan feeling and will tend to strengthen and revive sentiment for the betterment of our dear land rather than legislation for the classes.

We cannot imagine a more beautiful sight than to see a company of these old soldiers, most of whom are crippled or infirmed from that memorable four years' struggle, putting aside every feeling, save that of love for his fellow man, and mingling their voices together in praise to Him who hath preserved their lives.

Many have already sent in their names and expressed their willingness to hold this reunion—for which we have not space to publish—but let not this interest lag until every old Confederate soldier within the bounds of our county shall have made known his wishes regarding this important step.

During President Cleveland's last administration he appointed Ex-Congressman Blount, of Georgia, commissioner to Hawaii, his duty being to report to the government the status of affairs on that island. He was severely arraigned by the Republicans for doing so, and especially did that obstreperous gentleman from Maine, Mr. Boutelle, criticize him. What has this same Boutelle to say about McKinley appointing Mr. Cathoun, of Illinois, commissioner to Cuba?

Senator Tillman has thrown away his pitchfork and has decided to use a base ball bat on the Republicans.

What pleasure can compare with a stroll to the Big spring Sunday afternoon?

E. Williamson and W. R. Smith were in Columbiana a few days last week constructing a telephone for that city. The telephone is a great invention boys, but "it's all talk."

Our handsome little editor, piloted by the jolly young doctor, E. C. Parker, were seen to pass this way Thursday morning. Nobody knew from whence they came, nor whether they went, however, we think that we rightly interpret their trade mark—good wearing apparel, when we say they were out for a "dear hunt" or "wild goose chase." Gentlemen you gave us every reason to doubt your professional journey. Eh? They didn't stop here as they were evidently aware of the scarcity of our "dear," besides they have some mercy in their hearts for "fellow deer hunters." We surmise from the course of their journey and length of their visit that they infested the coast of Hapersville and Vincent while on this hunting expedition.

The Best Remedy for Rheumatism.

From the Fairview (N. Y.) Register.

Mr. James Rowland of this village, states that for twenty-five years his wife has been a sufferer from rheumatism. A few nights ago she was in such pain that she was nearly crazy. She sent Mr. Rowland for the doctor, but he had read of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and instead of going for the physician he went to the store and secured a bottle of it. His wife did not approve of Mr. Rowland's purchase at first, but nevertheless applied the balm thoroughly and in an hour's time was able to go to sleep. She now applies it whenever she feels an ache or a pain and finds that it always gives relief. He says that no medicine which she had used ever did her as much good. Shelby Springs was a scene of great enjoyment Friday, the 14th of this month, the occasion being the opening ball of the season. The towns of Fayetteville, Shelby, Columbiana and Calera were represented by crowds of young people, while several visitors from Montgomery, Selma, New Orleans and Catherine were present. Dancing was the special feature of the evening, being indulged in until an early hour Saturday morning. The music was furnished by Selma's finest band which concluded the pleasure of the evening by the well-known and ever popular air "Home, sweet home." Those present, with one accord, join in thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Law, also their sweet daughter, Miss Lizzie, for those hours of enjoyment.

We are in receipt of an invitation to attend the first commencement of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute for Girls to be held at Montevallo May 23d to 25th. Although this is the close of the first year of this grand institution it is already recognized as one of the best institutions of learning in the state. Every month of its existence has been marked by wonderful improvements until it has at last reached the high standard to which it aspired. We note the special features of these closing exercises will be the commencement sermon by Rev. John O. Keener, D. D., and addresses by Dr. Geo. B. Eager and Governor J. F. Johnson. We feel assured this will be an occasion long to be remembered by the good wishers of this noble institution.

On Monday night our good citizens turned out en masse to discuss and devise means of securing the District Agricultural school. After a full discussion of this matter committees were appointed to ascertain the sentiment of the community and secure options on some of the most desirable lands to be had near here. A committee, with W. G. Parker as chairman, was appointed to clean and beautify the school grounds and building as much as possible, preparatory for the inspection of the governor and his committee. In this undertaking he should be assisted by every citizen of our town, for should we fail in our efforts to secure this school this work will not be lost but will stand as a monument of the interest we feel in the cause of education. A committee was also appointed to meet and entertain the committee sent by the state; to show them our many advantages over our sister competitors and give them a fair specimen of true born southern hospitality. These committees are called to meet the council again on Thursday morning and report on their various work.

Vandiver Locals.

We had a nice rain last week.

The health of this community is reasonable good at this writing with some few exceptions. Mr. Nehe Brasher who lives a few miles South of this place, is seriously ill with smothering at heart. Also Grandma Straner is very low and not expected to live many days.

We are glad to know that the six-year-old boy of Ezekiel Isibell, who was so unfortunate as to get his leg broken some time ago, is again able to walk.

M. C. Reynolds, of Birmingham, was here one day last week on business.

Uncle Thos. Lambert, of Leeds, came over Thursday to conduct the burial services of Mrs. Brown who was interred at the Lawley cemetery Thursday afternoon.

We are sorry to learn of the death of Mr. L. H. Dyke, postmaster at Sterrett. Mr. Dyke was born on the 18th day of March 1842, and joined the Missionary Baptist church in 1860, and died on the 11th of May. His sufferings were terrible but he bore them with christian fortitude, calling on the Lord at all times. About an hour before his death he said there was nothing in his way. He sang—In Heaven above where all is Love, and then tried to pray. His remains were interred at the Lawley cemetery Wednesday.

There was a large crowd at the Missionary Baptist church Saturday night to witness the ordinance of communion and foot-washing.

BUTCH.

From Lewis and Four Mile.

Cotton chopping is once more the order of the day.

Wheat is being harvested but is a little damaged with rust.

Messrs. J. C. Jackson and J. L. Riddle went to Wilsonville Thursday on business.

J. H. Mason, of The Advocate force made his final call on his daughter, Mrs. Geo. Powell, Saturday before last before he returned to his old home in Louisiana.

J. E. Jackson, of Four Mile, has sold his farm to a Mr. Russel, of Fayetteville, and will probably move far away in the fall. We regret to lose him.

Died, at her home near Lewis, May 6th, inst, Mrs. Albright. She was a good lady and highly respected by all that knew her. Her sickness was of short duration, neuralgia being the awful destructor.

E. S. Kyle, of Jackson's saw mill, is a constant visitor on Four Mile and it is said he is prospecting, but judging from his numerous visits to one certain place methinks he has about located.

It is to be hoped that our farmers will be more successful in raising plenty of corn and bacon this year than they were last. One thing there is a great deal more planted this year than last. Our genial friend J. L. Riddle informed us that he has bought corn this year for the first in 25 years.

Say, Butch, of Vandiver, is there a gentleman anywhere near or in your town known as J. Osie Dorrough? If so, tell him his friends are numerous in Lewis and on Four Mile and would be glad he would make his appearance here again as he is one of our old schoolmates and friends.

John Powell, accompanied by Miss Jennie Hadaway, of Four Mile, visited friends in Vincent Saturday and Sunday before last.

Mrs. Hadaway, who has been very ill for the past few months, is slowly improving.

Several of our young folks are anticipating a nice drive to Liberty next Sunday to attend a singing.

Lewis is being greatly improved by J. W. Bolin erecting a large sawmill and dry kiln one-half mile west of the Page place. This is four sawmills within three miles of each other. Pretty good for sawmills, isn't it?

"Pete" J. S. Jackson has purchased a splendid reaper and mower combined—so you see prosperity is near in the future as our farmers are preparing to reap the bountiful harvest of wheat and oats that we have all been so fortunate to raise this year and we are all very thankful.

Rev. S. S. Crumpton left Friday for Leeds to attend a singing.

L. A. Bradley, of Fayetteville, visited relatives on Four Mile Sunday.

Mrs. W. J. Jackson, of near Wilsonville, visited relatives on Four Mile Saturday and Sunday.

Died, at his home near Lewis, on the 15th inst., Mr. T. Henderson. He was buried at Lewis cemetery Sunday. Mr. Henderson was very old and in destitute circumstances. The long anticipated and bountiful wheat crop is now ready and being harvested—some of our oldest and most highly respected citizens say "it is the best they ever knew." Now friends where would our county be today was it not for the farmer? All indications for a large crop of corn and cotton are good. If it was not for the farmer in his poor helpless condition our country and city officers would go to ruin.

Rev. G. M. Lowery, of Jackson's sawmill, preached a very interesting and instructive sermon at Four Mile Sunday.

SECRETARY SHERMAN has formally notified the British government, through Sir Julian Pauncefote, that the United States senate, having failed to ratify the treaty providing for general arbitration, that document has failed.

GOV. FISKE of Michigan said, on the 20th, that if the members of the legislature wanted to get through and go home the last of May they must first pass a law to get at least $1,000,000 more out of corporations. Otherwise he would call an extra session.

ON the 20th the house of representatives passed the Cuban relief resolution appropriating $50,000 for food and supplies for destitute American citizens in Cuba.

DUN'S COMMERCIAL REVIEW.

Unmistakable Evidence of Improvement in Business—General Increase of Commercial Loans, Mostly for Eastern Merchants or Companies, but with Considerable from the Middle West—General Review of Markets.

NEW YORK, May 22.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

Unmistakable evidence of improvement comes in the general increase of commercial loans, mostly for eastern merchants or companies, though some well-known houses in the middle west appear with considerable rediscouts from the south.

Not for a long time have commercial loans been fully half the whole. The distinct change gives proof that new business has been larger than may have supposed. Receipts of money from the interior exceed shipments $1,500,000, mostly from the middle west.

Exports of gold have no influence, and only signify the willingness of Russia to pay a price for the gold needed. The excess of merchandise imports to answer demands for half a year to come involve a greater excess of exports when the anticipatory movement ends and crops begin to move, which fact renders large outgoes of gold less likely, and gives the country a stronger position in international markets.

Meanwhile, there is a continuing increase, distinct, though gradual, in the volume of business in demand for products of manufacture and, considering the time of year, in movement of grain and produce.

Western wheat receipts exceed last year's for the week, 2,384,180 bushels, against 1,738,086 bushels, and Atlantic exports were 1,670,813 bushels, flour included, against 1,302,491 bushels last year, and for three weeks 4,778,722 bushels, against 3,885,910 last year.

Western receipts of corn were 1,655,677 bushels, against 1,495,670 bushels, and Atlantic exports 2,188,823, against 1,608,748 bushels last year, notwithstanding the enormous increase hitherto.

Wheat again cheated hopeful buyers, and fell nearly four cents, closing 3½ cents lower for the week.

Corn was a shade weaker. Cotton once more hopefully advanced to 7½ cents, but fell back to 7¼ cents with poor support here or abroad.

Both the volume of stock and the condition of domestic and foreign markets for goods hinder advance, and later acreage reports are better. The iron industry has quite an increase in new business, though not in all branches. Part was due to the rupture of the steel beam pool and the fall in price from 1.55 to 1.35 nominally quoted, and some good structural contracts were at once secured. Part is due to a better demand for plates and for pipe, of which one large contract for Indiana fields was placed, and part to growing needs for cars and vessels.

There is also some increase in rods, though the season for wire and nails is nearing an end, because of an expected pool of rod mills.

Low southern freight rates marketed a little more iron at the north and eastern foundry slightly lower with gray forge only $3.35 at Pittsburgh. The Carnegie works are now turning out 3,000 tons rails daily, nearly all on old orders, and exports of finished products increase.

Sales of copper, said to be nearly 60,000,000 pounds, have stiffened the price to 11½ for lake, and tin rose to 1½ cents in spite of large arrivals, though lead was weaker at 3.25 cents, and tin plates at 3.30. Coke is also a shade lower.

Sales of wool decrease, though still greater than when all the mills were busy, but manufacturers are doing scarcely anything, most of their possible demand for months ahead having been supplied. Western holders begin to offer at 1 to 1½ cents lower than of late.

Woolen goods are dull, but prices are firm. The strike of clothing hatters here somewhat restricts the new demand. Cotton goods are without change in prices, print cloths still at the lowest on record, and the demand is still indifferent, with talk of temporary closing of mills at the south.

THE RELIEF RESOLUTION.

It Has Not Yet Received the Signature of the President of the Senate.

WASHINGTON, May 22.—The resolution appropriating $50,000 for the relief of suffering Americans in Cuba was signed Thursday by Speaker Reed, but owing to the absence of the vice-president and President pro-tem Frye of the senate could not receive the signature of either of them on behalf of the senate. As the senate has adjourned until Monday it can not be signed before that date.

Consular Officers in Cuba Authorized to Draw For Funds.

WASHINGTON, May 22.—The secretary of state has directed Consul-General Lee, at Havana, to draw for immediate purchase of supplies and medicines for the relief of American citizens and transportation of such as are without means and desire to return to the United States, not to exceed $10,000. He is also instructed to furnish United States consuls in Cuba, at his discretion, funds for this purpose. United States Consul Brice, at Matanzas, has been instructed by the secretary of state to apply to Consul-General Lee for funds with which to relieve American citizens there.

MURDER AND SUICIDE.

Double Tragedy in Oklahoma Caused by Jealousy.

WICHITA, Kas., May 22.—Wesley Zelebock, of Grant county, Okla., in a fit of jealousy, killed Joe Hajek while he was visiting the girl for whose hand they were rival suitors. The sheriff found Zelebock and Hajek dead in great agony beside the sheriff in the buggy, after having first confessed that he had swallowed strychnine with suicidal intent. Both men were under 32 and Bohemians.

ALLEGED FORGED WILL.

A Contest in Prospect Over Jacob Z. Davis' Millions—Davis was a Man of Hobbies—A Will, Said to Have Been Found in the Urn Containing the Ashes of His Dead Wife, Declared by Some of the Heirs Spurious.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 22.—A will, declared to be a forgery, and discovered in the urn containing the ashes of the testator's dead wife, is one of the sensational features that will be presented in the contest over the estate of the late Jacob Z. Davis, the San Francisco millionaire, philanthropist and patron of arts and sciences.

Davis was born in Philadelphia, and was a man of hobbies. Not the least of these was a desire to collect the remains of his relatives in the old Dunkard churchyard at Germantown, near Philadelphia, where he expended over $10,000 in erecting white marble headstones over their graves. He also caused to be built an addition to the old church, and it was during a visit to attend to the completion of the structure that he died in October last, at the Continental hotel.

Davis was at one time president of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, an active member of the Academy of Sciences, and took a deep interest in the state mining bureau. During his life he not only gave them a great deal of money, but made them presents of statuary and rare minerals.

On the night of his death, it is stated, Davis sent for John Sanderling, a relative, requested him to write at his dictation what he intended to be his will. Sanderling had nearly completed the document when Davis suddenly declared that his pulse had stopped beating. A few minutes later he died leaving the will uncompleted.

This uncompleted document Sanderling submitted to the American Trust Co. and to a lawyer in Philadelphia. He was advised that, while there was no signature to the paper, such documents have been construed by courts to be wills, and he accordingly filed it with the trust company. Three weeks after Davis' death, and after Alex. Boyd, his partner, and E. B. Mastick, his life-long friend and attorney, had searched high and low for a will without avail, the document now before the probate court, making Lizzie Muir and Mrs. Belle Curtis the sole legatees of the dead millionaire, mysteriously appeared. It is alleged to have been found in the urn containing his wife's ashes. The document was filed for probate, and is now being contested by the nephew and niece in the east, Catherine Stead and Joseph Wilson, who set up that the paper is a forgery, is not the last will of Davis, or, if it is, that it was made at a date when he was of weak mind and under undue influence.

FLOODS IN NEW MEXICO.

Many Villages Submerged by the Overflow of the Rio Grande, Canadian and Their Tributaries.

DENVER, Col., May 22.—According to dispatches from New Mexico, heavy rains have so swollen the Rio Grande and other streams that considerable damage has already been done and more is threatened. The valley north and south of Albuquerque is inundated. The small Mexican villages of Rachers de Attisio, Los Padillos, Paredas and Atrisco near Albuquerque are partly submerged, and a number of houses are surrounded by two feet of water. If the rise continues, and the Rio Grande sweeps over its bank to a greater extent than at present, a number of adobe houses will be washed down, valley farms will be obliterated, and there will be great distress among the small farmers. A number of men are watching the dyke north of Albuquerque. It is believed there is no immediate danger of its giving way.

A heavy hail-storm killed thousands of lambs, besides a great number of sheep.

Near Las Vegas and Springer, and up through the Red river country, streams are reported out of their banks and bridges washed away, impeding travel for several days. Considerable damage is reported in the Las Vegas hot springs canyon. One of the dams of the Las Vegas Water Co. was carried out. It is impossible to ford the Canadian rivers. Wires along the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe and Denver & Rio Grande railroads in New Mexico are prostrated.

ELECTION OFFICERS ARRESTED.

They Just Fixed Up the Returns Any Old Way.

ST. LOUIS, May 22.—C. William Moeller, James J. Moran, C. H. Schokmiller, Thomas F. Carey and Thomas F. Dunn, judges and clerk of election at the recent school board election, have been arrested on the complaint of Edward R. Johnson, a clerk in the same precinct, who called the attention of the election commissioners to the grossly fraudulent manner in which the returns had been made, of which the books gave the most convincing evidence, and also to his own battered condition as the result of his refusal to become a party to the fraud. As the books are signed by all of the above-mentioned parties they have furnished the evidence for their own conviction, and the election commissioners will endeavor to land them till in the penitentiary as a warning to others who would tamper with the results of elections.

THEOSOPHIST SETTLEMENT.

It Now Occupies More Than Half a Square Mile on the Bay at San Diego, Cal.

SAN DIEGO, Cal., May 22.—Theosophists have closed a deal by which 40 acres of land at Point Loma has been added to their holdings, which now include more than half a square mile in the choicest situation on the bay. Their temple, which is to be erected upon this tract, will cost at least $250,000, and other improvements connected with the same will cost about $150,000 more. They have already expended $50,000 on the property.

ATTEMPTED HOLD-UP.

A Lone Robber, Evidently New at the Business, Tried to Hold Up an Electric Car, but is Met by Men as Nervous as Himself, and in the Result Which Follows is Shot and Killed.

TACOMA, Wash., May 22.—A single robber late yesterday afternoon held up and attempted to rob an incoming car on the Stellacom electric line. About four miles out of the city a tall man, roughly dressed, halted the car, which stopped to let him aboard. As he got on the car he pulled a blue-dotted calico mask, having holes cut through for eyes, down over his face, produced a revolver, and ordered Superintendent Dame, of the motor line, and Motorman William to the rear of the car. They complied slowly and he followed, ordering the men and passengers to hold up their hands and the ladies to sit still.

Dame and Wellman had entered a rear compartment used for carrying baggage and freight. The robber evidently thought them safely disposed of, for he paid no more attention to them, but commenced relieving the passengers of their valuables.

Supt. Dame drew his gun and fired at the robber, who returned the fire. Dame fired two shots and the robber three. Two minutes later the robber was lying beside the car dead, while Dame had been shot in the arm and Jewitt Smith, a passenger, in the leg.

One of Dame's bullets passed through the right arm of the robber and the other through the left arm, both entering his body, striking lungs or heart. Groaning heavily he staggered backward to the front platform and fell off the steps, head downward.

OFFICIAL ABUSES

Pennsylvania Penitentiary Peculiarities Exposed by Judge Gordon.

PHILADELPHIA, May 21.—To-day's session of the legislative committee investigating the management of the state penitentiaries was sensational. Judge James Gay Gordon, of the Philadelphia court of common pleas, was the star witness. He said the official reports of the prison were filled with falsehood, and that he could prove that the treatment of many convicts had been brutal and cruel. He said the institution reported that there were ten insane patients there in November last and that an investigation made by him showed there were 50 at that time. Of these, he said, nine are now in insane asylums and one is dead from the results of cruel treatment at the prison.

Twenty-six of the insane convicts, he added, are still in cells in the prison.

He instanced the case of McGue, a prisoner, whom he had ordered sent from the prison to the Norristown state insane asylum, and who died the next day, as alleged by the judge, from a beating he received the night before his removal from the pen. He told of another insane convict, a colored man named Prentiss, who for eight months had been tied to the prison steam pipe every night.

SENATOR JOSEPH H. EARLE.

South Carolina's Junior Senator Had But a Short Career at Washington.

GREENVILLE, S. C., May 22.—United States Senator Joseph H. Earle died here at 5:40 p. m. Thursday.

Joseph H. Earle was born at Greenville, S. C., April 30, 1847. Having been left an orphan in his early childhood, he resided with his guardian near Sumter, S. C., and attended the high schools at that place until he entered the service of the confederacy in the war between the states. At the close of the war, while still a boy, he was a member of Charles' battery of light artillery, Johnson's army. Soon after the cessation of hostilities he entered Furman university at Greenville, S. C., where he finished his collegiate education. He taught school for three years, and during that time studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1870.

In 1878 he was elected to the legislature of South Carolina from Sumter county, and in 1882 he was elected to the senate from the same county. He was a delegate to the democratic national convention in 1880 and 1884, and was appointed by the latter convention a member of the committee to notify Mr. Cleveland of his nomination for president.

He was elected attorney-general of South Carolina, and was re-elected in 1883. In 1890 he opposed Benjamin R. Tillman as the conservative candidate for governor, and was defeated. In 1892 he was elected circuit judge, which position he held when elected to the United States senate as a democrat on January 27, 1897, to succeed J. L. M. Irby.

THE ROMEYN COURT-MARTIAL.

The Matter in the Hands of the Secretary of War and President.

WASHINGTON, May 22.—Secretary Alger is preparing a brief of the proceedings and record of the court-martial case of Capt. Romeyn, of the Fifth cavalry. He has had no opportunity to do more than to discuss the matter briefly with the president and at the request of the latter is now making up a statement of the salient points in the case. Pending this there is no possibility of arriving at an idea of what the president's action on the court-martial sentence will be, nor has Secretary Alger himself indicated the nature of his recommendation to the president.

A COPPERHEAD'S VICTIMS.

Mother and Two Children Killed by a Snake.

PIKE HILL, Ky., May 22.—Two children of Ed Dr

H. C. DuBOISE, Editor.

COLUMBIANA, MAY 27, 1897.

EARNST APPEAL FOR A REUNION.

I know not if there be few or many who are in harmony with me in the idea that a halo of romance surrounds certain customs, which can never be dispelled by modern innovations or the varying tides of mutability; but certain it is in the depths of my heart, it is a sweet fancy which I cherish along with memories of the past that "were not born to die."

CONFEDERATE REUNION.

Who to hear this, but may instantly see arise, like the misty figures in the Pata Morgana the faces of loved ones gone before. They are indeed beyond recall and it rests with us, the living, to perpetuate their heroic deeds. And in such reunions only can we bring close to our hearts the memories of our lost comrades, linked together like priceless gems upon a golden cord. We are growing old, and it assumes for us the importance of a duty that we shall imbue our children's hearts with the kindly feelings which engender pride in and love for our country, and to teach them that it should be their universal boast that they belong to the greatest nation in the world. Think of the scope of populated country! Think of the immigration and the development of the United States! Why, it has been with the strong, swift majestic sweep of the eagle toward the sun that civilization has penetrated the wilderness of the West, girdled the mountains and tunneled the electric wires, like silver lines, even to the golden gates of San Francisco. Is there one among us who does not feel a thrill of deep delight when he realizes that this rich benison will descend undivided to our children and to our children's children.

The sons of the South never shrink from the issue of national affairs. Her sons have fought in all the wars in which the United States has been engaged since the Revolution. The records of her services are to be found in the annals of the country. She has produced many impassioned orators. The harmony of their oratory has sung itself into our forests and winds have wafted it from mountain down to the shore, even as the voice of Demosthenes mingled its music with the thunder of the waves and so goes sounding on from time to eternity. Therefore, it seems right and appropriate that she should have a Confederate Reunion, those brave and heroic spirits who buckled on their armor and defended the principles for which they were willing to die. Welcome, then, thrice welcome to those soldiers who, inspired by these sentiments of national pride and national regard, will indicate a time and place when we can look into their eyes and listen to their happy voices recalling the amusing incidences of war; the memory of them is like gathering roses from waste places or hearing the song of birds amid the dust and roar of booming cannon and clashing arms. But thank God we have "stacked arms" and can say "Here we rest."

STAMINA.

It is said that at one time Jay Gould was accustomed to take a morning dram. He found that his brain was not so clear after drinking, and at once became a teetotaler. His purpose, though not of the loftiest, was strong enough to force out of his life everything that would interfere with success.

Hugh Miller, the great Scotch geologist, was a stonemason by trade. His employers were accustomed to "treat" their workmen on all occasions; and there was no disgrace attached to the custom of drinking. After one of these celebrations our embryo geologist took out a pocket edition of "Bacon's Essays," and found that the letters danced before his eyes. Right then he formed a resolution to the effect that he would never again sacrifice his capacity of intellectual enjoyment to a drinking habit.

Thousands of men, chafing under a feeling of moral degradation, form the same resolution, and break it under the first temptation. Why this difference?

One of Miller's fellow-workmen gives it in a single sentence. "You have stamina, Miller, you will force your way; but I have no strength; the world will never hear of me."

Boys, you may cultivate this moral strength, or you may, by giving way to temptation so honeycomb your character in youth that success in any noble undertaking will be beyond your power. Which will you do?

MARAH.

The placing of a twelve inch silver star on the spot where Jefferson Davis stood when he was inaugurated president of the confederacy, illustrates a phase of southern sentiment which we trust will never die. The South passionately admires a brave man in the true sense of the word brave, and reveres his memory, and proportionately condemns a coward. All honor to the ladies of the South. This is Southern chivalry; and Jefferson Davis with all his failings was a truly brave, as well as a great man.—Mountain Home.

They say the Birmingham and Selma newspaper reporters have seen the airship. Don't be surprised. City newspaper reporters are liable to see anything from snakes up.—Mountain Home.

It looks like we were going to have another railroad.

It is rumored that Governor Bob Taylor will resign the governorship of Tennessee this fall to enter the field as a lecturer, where he supposes, he will be more lucratively awarded. If this be true the governor must have more wit than patriotism, when it is remembered that he was the only democrat in the state that could carry the election and was consequently persuaded to make the race.

The fourth annual session of the Alabama Chatauqua will meet in Talladega June 21 to July 18. Mr. West has succeeded in securing some of the most able and distinguished lecturers America affords and promises a grand treat to all who attend.

The cry for corn among the farmers of this county is becoming distressing; it is wholly beyond the power of the merchants to supply the demand. Let this be an object lesson in future.

EVER-LIVING CONSERVATISM.

From the Mobile Register.

It is just one hundred years since democracy became a recognized factor in shaping the political history of this republic, however, there are eager enemies who proclaim that democracy is dead. Their wish is the father of the thought. Democracy is something which has always existed, and will always exist. It is one of the many names for a potent fact. The name may be changed, the fact remains. It is like matter; it cannot be destroyed. It is the force conservative, as opposed to the force radical. The very nature of it is that when most fought against it is most active and most useful.

Observers of the elementary features of political life have not failed to observe that in every political entity there are in operation these two forces; the radical or progressive, and the conservative or protective. One or the other is in the ascendancy, as the needs of the entity seem to require but at no time is either force quiescent, although, as in the so-called "era of good feeling" of 1823, both may sometimes seem to be so. There is eternal conflict between the factions of government everywhere. One faction desires to experiment with new theories, claiming that new conditions have arisen that excuse and demand new methods; the other faction believes that there are no entirely new conditions, and that the past offers examples of every kind of difficulty that can be presented to the attention of men engaged in government.

The tendency in hard times is always toward radicalism. It is of little use to show by past experience that there are no new methods of manufacturing prosperity. Ill-informed people are ever ready to believe that there is gold at the end of the rainbow. They can find out their mistake only by making the fruitless journey.

During the recent period of depression, there has been a rapid and large growth of the radical sentiment. It has approached the revolutionary in character. Ostracism has been preached and differences of opinion have been frowned upon as disloyal to what are described as the interests of the people. The true interests of the people are not to be found in radicalism, however, nor yet in revolution; but in the study and practice of conservative doctrines, such as Jefferson and the fathers of democracy continually preached and the party they founded constantly obeyed. Of late years many in that party have gone astray, and have consorted with so large a radical element, that the party now bearing the name of democracy is even more radical than the old republican party, whose professed policy is that of radicalism. It is impossible that this accidental relationship should be successfully maintained. The country has no use for two radical parties. There is bound to be a conservative organization to maintain the balance, and it exists, although in as yet an unorganized state. It will manifest itself before the development of the next national campaign. It will embrace all of the conservative elements of the country, and will, we believe, be the strongest organization that will take part in that campaign—provided, of course, the old radical party, the republican, persists in its present course of pure radicalism. It is already driving away from it all the friends it made by its opposition to extreme populist radicalism last year. There will be left to the conservatives no other course but to perfect organization and force all the radical elements into one camp. This they will do, or rather, be required by the force of circumstances to do.

We are having fine weather for the farmers and most of them are well up with their work. Corn has just begun to grow and cotton has the slow fever but the oat crop is fine.

The Best Remedy for Rheumatism.

From the Fairview (N. Y.) Register.

Mr. James Rowland of this village, states that for twenty-five years his wife has been a sufferer from rheumatism. A few nights ago she was in such pain that she was nearly crazy. She sent Mr. Rowland for the doctor, but he had read of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and instead of going for the physician he went to the store and secured a bottle of it. His wife did not approve of Mr. Rowland's purchase at first, but nevertheless applied the balm thoroughly and in an hour's time was able to go to sleep. She now applies it whenever she feels an ache or a pain and finds that it always gives relief. He says that no medicine which she had used ever did her as much good. "So had that blanket you put over me last night," snapped the bald-headed man as he yanked on his skull cap.—Detroit Free Press.

According to the newspapers, an Ohio husband became the happy father of seven children not long ago. Of the seven all lived but one. It is to be hoped he laid in a supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, the only sure cure for cough, whooping-cough, colds and croup, and so insured his children against these diseases. For sale by J. E. Seale & Co., druggists.

Miss Naldo Christian, of Shelby, spent several days of last week visiting her brother, C. J. Christian, at this place.

Miss Lillian Upshaw, after a lengthy visit to friends here, left Saturday for Shelby Springs where she will spend some time.

J. R. Beavers and wife returned Sunday from a month outing on the coast of Mississippi. They both look much improved.

We are truly glad to state that Willie Albright, after a severe and painful illness of several days, is again rapidly improving.

Quite a crowd of young folks from Wilsonville and Harpersville came down Friday night to witness the commencement exercises of our school.

Misses Mary and Meter Bolin, Blossom Densler, Pernie Pope and Helen Boyer, five young ladies of whom our sister city, Wilsonville, is justly proud were guests of friends in the city last Friday and Saturday.

The date of the supper for the benefit of the Baptist church has been changed from May 25th to June 4th. The supper will be at the house of Mrs. Laura Armstrong. Ice cream and cake served at popular prices.

The closing exercises of the Wilsonville Institute Exposition takes place today and tomorrow. The annual concert in connection with this institution occurs tomorrow evening. J. B. Kilpatrick is principal of this school.

We were permitted to spend only a few hours at Montevallo during the commencement of the Polytechnic Institute for Girls just closed on yesterday, but only a glance at this great institution was necessary to prove that it is one of the best, if not the best, college for girls in the state. During our short stay we were shown all the various industries taught in this school and was convinced that the amount of practical information to be gained there is inestimable. In the dressmaking department was an exhibition of some of the work of the scholars and, although we are incompetent judges, it was as beautiful to our eyes as any we had ever seen. In the art gallery was pictures of the most gaudy hue and exquisite beyond the power of expression. Thus in every department was to be seen specimens of the work they are accomplishing, and to say it is simply wonderful, is stating it mildly. We learn the entire program was carried out in the most perfect manner and that the trustees of the school were very favorably impressed with its outlook. We feel sure after the success of the session just closed that in the beginning of the next number of attendants will be greatly increased.

Governor J. F. Johnson, Major I. P. Culver, Commissioner of Agriculture, and J. O. Turner, the committee sent out by the state to inspect the lands and property offered by the various towns to secure the Agricultural School, visited our town last Saturday. They were met by our committee on entertainment and shown some of our many advantages together with the property proposed to be offered by our town. They were non-committal however, but will receive these offers at a meeting a few weeks hence in Montgomery, on which occasion our town will be well represented and we hope will be able to offer sufficient inducements to secure this school.

The ladies in and around Columbiana are invited to meet at the White House Monday afternoon for the purpose of preparing a box of flowers to be sent to assist in decorating the graves of our Alabama heroes in Ohio. This is a praiseworthy undertaking that we feel no true southern lady will fail to assist in, and it will require little expense or trouble on the part of any. We feel that no urging is necessary for our good ladies have only to be shown that it is an act of respect to our confederate dead and they will readily do all in their power for its promotion.

Miss Isla Avery, one of Shelby's most winsome and accomplished young ladies, having closed her school at Eustis, in the southern part of this state, honored friends in our city with a short visit on her return home last Friday.

Commencement Exercises.

The commencement of the Columbiana High School on last Thursday was truly a grand success considering the amount of labor spent in its preparation. Every one assigned a part seemed filled with the idea, that should they fail the entire exercises would be a failure, consequently the program from beginning to end was completed with only a few mistakes. In these exercises the children showed the mastery hands that had guided and instructed them for the past nine months. No one present, hearing the orations delivered by Messrs. Eliza and Willie Paul, Willie Weaver, and Lennel Crumpton, could but realize that great has been the success of this school in turning out such able representatives. While we commend every member of the faculty for their earnest and faithful efforts we would especially commend the principal, Prof. W. B. Greek, to whom is due the success of this school so far attained. Although laboring under many and serious disadvantages, still with unflinching energy he has persevered until today we have a school that is the pride of our entire county. As a pupil of his we believe him a thorough and competent teacher and shall ever remember his kindly interest in us.

Harpersville Echoes.

Bishop Thompson came in from the district meeting Saturday evening.

The Cater Bros. have added a corn mill to their gin machinery.

E. V. Caldwell and M. W. Boram spent a day or two of last week on Kelley's creek fishing.

G. W. Thompson and sister, Miss Lassie, attended the district meeting at Childersburg last week and report a pleasant time.

There was a match game of ball played here Saturday evening by the negroes, Harpersville nine against the Wallace nine. Scores stood 27 to 23 in favor of the Wallace.

D. W. Kidd and E. B. Hatcher are assisting Judge McMillan in his court this week.

Captain J. L. Walthall visited Birmingham last week.

Rev. Mr. Roberts being at the district meeting last Sunday, his appointment at the Methodist church was ably filled by Rev. Jim Self.

E. B. Teague spent last Saturday and Sunday with his sister, Mrs. Dr. Nelson.

Renfro Martin went over to see the Childersburg girls Sunday.

Frank Gorman, of Henry Eilen, came over Sunday and spent a few hours with Harpersville friends.

It was the cackling of a flock of geese that saved Rome from burning up, but it was the hard work of some negro boys that saved John Lee's house from burning one day last week.

Dr. Teague is spending a few days in town and will preach at the Baptist church next Sunday at 11 o'clock and will give a free lecture in the afternoon at 3 o'clock. A grand treat is in store for all of those who may be so fortunate as to attend.

Miss Della Thompson and Stella Posey visited Columbiana Monday.

That prosperity which the republicans talked so much about last fall, and which they promised to bring about if Mr. McKinley was elected, is mighty slow about coming and if it don't soon come I don't know how we are to pull through, so to speak, for times are getting mighty "squally" about our house. Money and credit all gone, meat up so high that we can't reach it, the flour in the barrel is getting low, molasses most all gone and Mrs. "Jake" got the last meal out of the barrel Saturday and the little ones haven't got their Summer hats, nor calico skirts either. So, hurry up Mr. McKinley and do something, if you don't something is sure "gyne" to happen. JAKE.

Sterrett Stirlings.

Rev. J. W. Lawley, pastor of the church at this place, filled his appointment last Saturday and Sunday, and preached interesting and instructive sermons.

Elias Cosper, of this place, visited relatives at Childersburg last Saturday and Sunday, returning home Sunday evening.

Pinson Falkner, who has been quite sick is, we are glad to say, improving.

Miss Ollie Falkner remains very sick. We hope she may soon recover.

Rev. S. V. McGinnis and wife, of this place, visited their son-in-law J. W. Spradley, at Cresswell last Friday and Saturday, returning home Sunday.

The picnic here next Saturday promises to be a success and an enjoyable affair. Every body invited and welcomed to attend the base ball game as the Sterrett nine has challenged or invited the Harpersville nine for a game here on that day.

D. Ray, of Cresswell, is visiting his uncle, J. M. Payton, of this place.

G. M. Billbre and family, of Vincent, visited the family of W. H. Falkner, last Sunday.

Miss Valcie Falkner, of this place, visited relatives at Cresswell last Saturday and Sunday.

Jas. F. Byars, of Leeds, visited his brother, R. J. Byars, with whom his aged and infirm mother lives, last Saturday.

Born, to Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Goodwin on the 23rd, inst., a girl. Success to you William.

The farmers are needing rain for their growing crops. Wheat crops promise to be very good, though some complaint of rust.

Several of the young people met at W. H. Falkner's residence last Sunday night and enjoyed and interlarded the family with a nice singing, led by Mr. J. B. Kincaid. DIXIE.

The Tramp Printer Did it.

When the editor of the Woodville Blower got sick and had to leave town for a week, he got Randolph Horton Tucker to get out the paper. Now Mr. Tucker was not an expert editor, but he could write nice little verses and sweet smelling society items and said he could manage the office first rate. He wanted to show a little extra enterprise, so he made a big-spread on local news and wrote up the notices for the advertisers in fine style. When his copy was all in he went home lighthearted and happy.

But alas and alack! The tramp printer, who was the foreman, printer and pressman and who had not been fully sober for a month, got the news and business notices all mixed in making up, and when The Blower appeared, items like the following greeted the astonished citizens:

"Go to Smith's for fresh Jersey butter. Guaranteed to be strictly all wool."

"Wanted to exchange a fine dun colored Shorthorn piano, perfectly gentle for an upright gun in good tune."

"Stubbs & Tubbs, dealers in green hides, rags, scrap iron, etc. Meals all hours."

"Reward of $10 will be paid for the arrest and detention of one of the most desirable residence lots in town. When last heard from was working on a steamboat in Alabama."

"Get your meals at the Snide House. Fresh steak and hash every 30 days, made of the finest corrugated steel and warranted to last a lifetime."

"Some very artistic fresco work has just been done on the interior of Judge Hamp Rollins, who was again elected justice of the peace last week."

The effect of the breezy issue of The Blower was such as to cause Mr. Randolph Tucker to abandon journalism and seek the more congenial calling of book agent in another state.—EX.

Dishonored Drafts.
When the stomach dishonors the drafts made upon it by the rest of the system, it is necessarily because its fund of strength is very low. Toned with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, it soon begins to pay out vigor in the shape of guns, rich blood, containing the elements of muscle, bone and brain. As a sequence of the new vigor afforded the stomach, the bowels perform their functions regularly, and the liver works like clock work. Malaria has no effect upon a system thus reinforced.

American Ingenuity.
American ingenuity has always been a wonder to foreigners. We know of no better illustration of it than is displayed in the manufacture of guns. For instance, the repeating shot gun made by the Winchester Repeating Arms Co., New Haven, Ct., which retails for about $20, will outshoot foreign hand made guns costing 20 times as much. This has been demonstrated time and time again. The leading shots of the country appreciate this and have put aside their expensive guns for the less costly but better shooting Winchester. People and Things at the "Confluence of the Streams."

News from Huckleberry Ridge—The Late Mullins Baby—Hiram and the Preacher—When Drinks Were Necessary.

According to Aunt Nancy Newton and the Scriptures, "she forgetteth her pains and rejoiceth much, for a man child is borned into the world," or words to that extent. One day last week Aunt Nancy drove our house to say good-by and howd'you.

She was on her return back home to the Panther Creek settlement from a pleasant trip over on Huckleberry Ridge. She had been over there unbeknownst to us on a little family visitation around amongst the Mullins—which you recollect Dave Mullins, he married Miss Bithy Lester. Now from what they tell me, Miss Bithy's mother was a Newton, though I never did find out for certain the full degree of kinship between her and Aunt Nancy. But anyhow, that dear, delightful old soul drove three miles out of her way and come around by our house to tell me and mother the latest and most freshest news from over there on Huckleberry Ridge.

The "Late" Mullins Baby.
"Don't you remember, Rufus, when Dave Mullins and Bithy Lester got married?" says Aunt Nancy, like as if I didn't have a blame thing to do but keep the wedding records of the country. I told her I remembered the wedding clear as a bell—particular the music and the dancin and the tremendous big infare dinner which followed—but to save my life I couldn't recollect exactly the year and the day when it all come to pass.

"Well, it was 17 years ago the third day of last November since Dave and Bithy took to mix in clothes for better or for worse," Aunt Nancy went on. "And 'blessed be the lord the good Lord' brought 'em with their firstborn baby, and a boy baby at that. Consequently you understand the general circumference of the surroundings at their house, and you will take my word for it when I tell you that the outloinest and most gonebyest confusion in the history of Huckleberry Ridge is now goin on right around there in the Mullins settlement."

"To be certainly the news was rather somewhat sudden and surprisin to me when I first heard about it, cause it did look to me by this time like Dave and Bithy never would fulfill the Scriptures. And now, naturally of course, to be there and see their proud looks and silly ways you would think it must be the only baby in the round created world. Now jest betwixt us gals, as it were, I have seen a whole passle of babies in my day and generation, Rufus, and I didn't find nothin so very extraordinary and pluperfectly fine about the late and the new and the unexpected Mullins baby—which at the same time it is a right promise boy. But yet still at the same time it is only a baby, and about like all the rest so far as I could see—with two arms and two legs, and two hands and two feet, and two ears and two eyes, and the general marks and appearances of a plain American baby boy. And at this late day if it is pleasant for Dave and Bithy to take unto themselves the flatterin, fool notion that they have got the only baby in the whole discovered country what's the difference to us? We know tremendous well that they are scandalous bad mistaken in regards to that."

Yet All Is Well.
"Bithy and the baby are both doin as well as you could expect along about this time of the year, and in the fullness of time I reckon Dave will recover. But for two days and nights it did raley look to me like the crazy asylum was right seriously threatened with his mauly presence," and with that Aunt Nancy went fumblin and foolin around in her thanky bag after her pipe and tobacco. "That night when the doctor first made his landin with the baby Dave looked like he didn't know which he had better do—take wings and fly away, or faint and fall over in it. His eyes got as big as a pair of cups and saucers, and bulged out till bless gracious if you couldn't of took a stick and scraped 'em off. He couldn't lie down, nor set up, nor keep still no way he could fix it. He was in a plum swivet and in everybody's way. By daylight next mornin he was out and gone to the lot tendin to his stock, and to see him stirrin around people that didn't know nothin about what had come to pass would of thought he was runnin of a six-mile farm and had got three weeks behind with his work."

"Before breakfast that mornin Doc Minters he come over to see what was what and who was who, and turned in by the lot lookin for Dave. He didn't find Dave out there, but he found his signs, and that was a gracious plenty to tell the whole story. "Now what do you reckon Dave had went and done, Rufus? Bless the heavens if he didn't feed his horse on cotton seed and goober vines, and then whirl in and give the cow ten ears of corn and two bundles of fodder. And when Doc saw the general signs of the times all he had to do was to come around to the front gate and ask what it was—a girl or a boy."

"As I said before, I reckon pore Dave will recover and come to his right mind onest more in the due fullness of time. And as for Bithy—you recollect what the Scripture says, Rufus—'She forgetteth her pains and rejoiceth much, for a man child is borned into the world.'"

The Necessary Drinks.
Old man Hiram Lucas used to tell a mighty good one on Judge Pickins—which you understand both of them have since then throwed their hands to the pack and went the common way of all human flesh.

"I have saw the handwritin of many sundry men, Rufus, but if there ever was a man that made a plum bust and fell down on it every time he went to write, his name was Judge Pickins," said old man Hiram in givin me the story.

"Onest upon a time, I recollect, when I had made a big land trade with Uriah Beverly—wherein, to tell the Bibb truth, I had just naturally swapped the socks off of Uriah so smooth and easy that it makes my head swim till yet when I think about it. Well, at any rates, I wanted the deeds and titlements fixed up bomb proof, so I went to Judge Pickins and got him to write out the papers. But then I never did read them papers clean through. I never have saw such a hand writin in my whole entire natural life. I raley couldn't have no serious doubts but what the judge knowed his business and had writ everything down accordin to law. But you see I wanted to know all them things to a dead and buried certainty. So the next time he come round on the circuit I took the papers to the judge and told him I would love for him to read his writin through and through with me. He looked at the papers a few minutes, and then says to me, says he:

"Hiram Lucas, did I write out them papers?"

"Judge Pickins, you did," says I.

"No mistake about that, Hiram?" says he.

"Sho as gin is iron and God made little apples," says I.

"Well, Hiram," says he, 'you will have to wait till I can throw down about three or four good, stiff drinks before I can read that writin. I was drunk when I wrote out them papers.'"

Now as for me, I never could worry the story down without a right smart sprinkle of snit on it, but old man Hiram maintained till the last that soon as the judge tanked up sufficient on the necessary drinks he read them papers through and through as clear and easy as you could read plain print.

"Watch and Pray."
"I never am to disremember the time when I saved Parson Dick Nabors off at the knees and got two drinks instid of one," said old man Hiram Lucas to me onest upon another time.

"Recollect, Rufus, that me and Dick Nabors was borned and bred and brung up on farms ajinin, and had been good friends from our early youth up to the present writin. But in the run of time it would seem like we had come up to what you might call a forks of the road. So Dick he went his way as a preacher, whilst I went mine as a full-blooded Luns and a natural-born horse-trader. One day we met up together in town. The weather was most hellacious cold, and finally at last, by some hook or mercoo I got Dick to go with me for a change of breath. We nominated our pizen and poured out the drinks, and then nothin would do Dick but he must stand by the Scriptures and offer up a short and fervent prayer before he took a little somethin for the stomach's sake. And in the main time, whilst he had his eyes shet and was givin thanks, I climbed up around his drink as well as mine.

"Where's my sperits?" says he, when he opened his eyes and saw the circumference of the calamity.

"Ask me no questions and I will tell you no lies," says I, 'but accordin to the Scriptures, Dick, you must watch and pray—watch as well as pray.'

He Saved the Valuables.

So far as I know, and as the family records run, there want any kinship between the Lucas generation of people and the Pickinses. But old man Hiram and Judge Pickins did favor like twin brothers in regards to one thing—they both had a tremendous big weakness for the early runnings of the corn.

One New Year old man Hiram made a runnin trade with his good wife, which was to the general extent that every time he bought a quart of sperits for himself he would buy a new dress for her. From what they say the old man was as good as his word clean through for 12 months. Amongst other family records and relics, Andy Lucas has got a paper which shows old man Hiram's store account for that particular year, and to look at it you would think he didn't buy nothin much but sperits and new dresses. All down the line you will notice these items:

"1 quart of sperits, 50 cts.
"1 frock for Mandy, 50 cts.
"1 quart of sperits, 50 cts.
"1 frock for Mandy, 50 cts.
"1 quart of sperits, 50 cts.
"1 frock for Mandy, 50 cts."

And so forth and so on all down the line.

But I started out to tell you about the terrible time when old man Hiram Lucas driv his wagon into a railroad wreck and didn't save a blessed thing out of the smash-up but his own life and "the valuables."

The way it come to pass—the old man hooked up his mule and his one-horse wagon and went to town. It was then way up into the fall of the year, nearly in the Christmas. Owin to the stage of the weather and the season of the year he had bought a half gallon jug of sperits that day and two "new frocks for Mandy." On his return back home that evenin it would seem like he got most ingloriously and superbly drunk. Consequently he was "sleepin it off" when he got to the railroad crossin, and the first thing he knew his mule and wagon had run into a tail-end collision with a railroad train.

By some strange hook or crook or freak of nature, when old man Hiram come to his senses his mule was killed dead and his wagon smashed into kindlin wood. But he didn't have a bone broke, whilst he found his jug of sperits and the bundle of dry goods safe and sound.

After supper that night somebody hailed at the gate, and when I went out to see, who should it be but old man Hiram Lucas—which he had left his wagon and dead mule at the wreck and was now footin it towards home. He had a jug in one hand and a bundle of dry goods under his arm. He told me to the best of his recollection all about the smash-up, and then wound up by sayin:

"Hit was a most hellatious bad scrape for a white man to drive into, but anyhow, Rufus, you will please take notice that I come out alive and saved the valuables."

With that old man Hiram ambled on down the road towards home with his jug of sperits and two "new frocks for Mandy."

WHY PROSPERITY DID NOT COME

Failure of the Republicans to Keep Their Promise.

When the election was over last November the country looked for prosperity. It had been promised. Mr. McKinley had been heralded as its "advance agent." The opportunity to secure it was at hand. The means were perfectly obvious.

The prosperity has not come. The revival that might have been wrought has not been wrought. A new paralysis has been inflicted upon industry and new barriers have been erected in the path of commerce.

The fault lies solely with republican mismanagement, with the willful perversion of power from the purposes for which it was conferred to purposes of partisanship.

All conditions were favorable to a great revival of industry. We had been for many months exporting an enormous excess of exports. The "trade balance" was heavily in our favor. Every condition was propitious except one. The revenues were not adequate to meet expenditures.

To remedy this one adverse condition was manifestly to give the country the rest it needed and to bring about an era of prosperity greater than had been known since tariff tinkering for political purposes began. It was only necessary for the republican congress to pass bills, which the democratic president would gladly have approved, imposing a small extra tax on beer and possibly some inconsiderable stamp taxes on transactions involving the transfer of wealth.

Had that been done the revenues would have been adequate. There would have been no occasion for an extra session and the country would have had a badly-needed period of rest for recuperation until December next.

But the republicans feared that if revenues should be made adequate without tariff tinkering there would be no excuse for a new tariff, no opportunity to reward campaign contributors with benefits and gratuities to be paid out of the pockets of the people. And so they refused to pass any revenue bills. They deliberately adopted the extra session for tariff-ripping purposes as a policy—resolved to give the country the fourth tariff in seven years.

Instantly when this was understood the activities of the country halted. The merchant refused to order goods, not knowing what duties he might have to pay upon them. The manufacturer curtailed his operations, not knowing under what conditions his products were to be marketed.

Then came the worst blight of all—the threat of retroactive duties. For fear that merchants might import goods or manufacturers bring in raw materials heavily in anticipation of a new tariff bill with enormously increased schedules, the house decreed that all goods imported while the act was pending should be subject later to the duties imposed.

The result was in part that commerce stopped, and in other part that the importers of goods under the existing tariff felt compelled to add to their prices all that the new duties threatened. The manufacturers whose free raw materials were threatened in the same way had to raise their prices accordingly. The people were thus forced to pay a tax not one dollar of which is likely ever to find its way into the treasury.

Thus, instead of the prosperity that was so easily within our grasp, we have an industrial and commercial paralysis forced upon us solely for partisan purposes.

It is a betrayal of a trust which the people have already resented in the spring elections, and which they will surely punish with blasting severity in elections yet to come.

The republican promise of prosperity was an easy one to fulfill. It has been deliberately withheld, and the American people perfectly know why.—N. Y. World.

Rebuke for Dingley.

Mr. Dingley has not yet recovered the power of speech. Colleagues and friends hastened to him, as soon as the senate bill was reported, exclaiming: "Bless thee, Bottom, thou art translated!" But the chairman of the ways and means committee insists that he must not comment on his translated bill until he has had time to examine it and so to remark upon it "intelligently." But it does not require a high order of intelligence, nor prolonged thought, to see that the senate committee have, in effect, told Mr. Dingley that his estimates of revenue were all moonshine; that his tax on books and art was an indefensible barbarism; that his retroactive clause was a mere hog with all the stuffing let out of it; that his reciprocity proposals were ludicrous. No such damaging reflection has ever been made on a chairman of the ways and means committee by a committee of his own party in the senate. If Mr. Dingley does not know how crushing the rebuke administered to him is, he is the only man in the country who does not.—N. Y. Post.

Has No Friends Now.

However much the country may desire to have the tariff settled and business arranged under its provisions, it is better to have a carefully considered scheme of duties than one rushed through in hot haste which business men will repeat at leisure. If the senate were to follow the precedent of the house and jam through the Dingley bill without investigation and discussion it would be a calamity. We doubt if even Mr. Dingley himself would do it. He would favor the adoption of his bill as it left the house. Certainly the business interests of the country, however much they may favor a revised tariff, a protective tariff perhaps, do not want the Dingley tariff. That legislative abortion has no friends now.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The republican senators who are holding an autopsy on the mangled remains of the Dingley bill appear to have come to one sane conclusion. They have been forced to acknowledge that a prohibitory tariff will not produce revenue. However effective it may be in fostering monopolies it will not cure a deficit. They are therefore compelled to supplement the restrictive tariff with some revenue taxes.—N. Y. World.

The owners of industries to be protected under the new tariff bill have already been raising the prices of their products, but have not said a word about lifting the wages of employees.—Louisville Times.

THE TARIFF IN POLITICS.

Foolish Talk of Placing the Measure with a Commission.

Senator Cullom has written a remarkable letter to the tariff commission league favoring the object of the league, which proposes the removal of the tariff question from national politics and placing it in the hands of a commission, whose duty it shall be to supervise the tariff laws and keep congress informed concerning desirable or necessary changes.

Senator Cullom says that something ought to be done "to avoid constant and extreme changes in the tariff legislation—first going so far in the direction of a high tariff, and on the occasion of a change of politics going as far the other way." He wants to prevent the necessity of a change of the whole tariff by the party coming into power, for the reason that the business of the country will not tolerate it.

It is gratifying to hear a republican senator talking of the hardship to business of wholesale tariff tinkering and of the desirability of putting a stop to it. But when he talks of the necessity of such a wholesale change he is talking nonsense, for the republicans found a moderately high tariff law in force when they came into power and could have made it acceptable to the mass of their own partisans and a sufficient revenue measure by very few changes. All of the extreme tariff legislation that has been accomplished has been the work of the republicans.

When the democrats came into power four years ago they found in force an extreme measure, which was almost as roundly abused by the republicans as by the democrats. They were pledged to a reduction of the tariff on a revenue basis, but when the Wilson bill became a law it was still a measure of moderate protection and merely made a start in the direction of a revenue tariff.

To talk, therefore, of the danger and folly of extreme tariff changes is to indict the republicans, who now propose to upset a moderate reduction of an extreme measure by a still more extreme measure. To place this extreme measure in the hands of a commission charged with the duty of keeping it extreme would not take the tariff out of politics. Tariff tinkering for the purpose of enriching one set of citizens at the expense of others on the part of a commission would be more objectionable than tariff tinkering by congress. Until tariffs are leveled for revenue and not for robbery it is not worth while to put tariff legislation in the hands of a commission and the tariff question cannot be taken out of politics.—St. Louis Republic.

SILVER A NECESSITY.

Would Restore the Equilibrium of the Currency.

Discussion of the questions which arise concerning the circulating medium have resulted in so broadening the minds of those opposed to silver that only a few are left whose sole reply to arguments made by an advocate of the white metal is: "You're a crank or a lunatic."

Time was when abuse and ridicule were considered quite the proper thing by goldite editors and spellbinders, but that time has very nearly passed. There are, however, a few narrow-minded men in this country who cling to the old method of procedure, but in their unreasoning abuse they harm no one except themselves and their cause.

Facts are more convincing than fustian, and bimetalists, having the facts on their side, are spreading conviction broadcast among the people. When the fact is stated that all the gold in the world would furnish but $2.50 per capita, the reply discountenances that the man who states the fact is a "crank or a lunatic" loses force. It is not good economy to conduct the business of the world on a limited capital. What would be thought of a merchant who would endeavor to make a success of his enterprise on one-tenth of the amount of capital it required? The goldites would be fully justified in characterizing such a man as a "crank or a lunatic."

For a period of 20 years, the United States has been doing business under conditions the tendency of which has been steadily against the debtor. The increase in the purchasing power of gold has made it out of the question for the debtor to cancel his obligations, because he has been compelled to surrender to the creditor from day to day, from month to month and from year to year all the products of his labor. The price of commodities having fallen steadily, the creditor gets all the benefit, and the dollar a man borrowed last year must be paid this year with the unearned increment of an appreciating currency added to the original obligation.

We hear a great deal about the dishonesty of the "50-cent dollar" and the wrong its adoption would inflict upon the creditor, but the 50-cent dollar is a myth and the rehabilitation of silver would simply restore the equilibrium of the currency, establish a just relation between debtor and creditor, prevent the pauperizing and enslaving of labor and bring prosperity once more within our gates.—Chicago Dispatch.

OPINIONS AND POINTERS.

Many people begin to look on Mr. McKinley as the advance agent of adversity.—Louisville Dispatch.

So long as we are shut in behind the wall of Chinese protection, which not only keeps foreign goods out, but shackles our export trade by keeping our products in, high wages are paid until overproduction and the clogged home market compel the shutting down of the mill. Then there are no wages at all.—N. Y. Times.

The yellow metal's sudden notion to indulge in the pleasure of a European trip leads the Cincinnati Enquirer to suspect that "the gold brokers have been quiet for campaign purposes as long as they believe is justified by their material interests." That is the single gold standard was ordained for their use and pleasure, and it is folly on their part to longer refrain from having fun with it.—Binghamton (N. Y.) Leader.

Private interests can get the ear of congress without difficulty, and can secure the active support of politicians in their campaign for higher taxes for their benefit. But when there is a great cause in which the people of the whole country are deeply interested its representatives are told that nothing can be done until it is known whether or not there is to be a tax on hides. Public business is sacrificed to private greed.—Indianapolis News.

TILLMAN'S PITCHFORK.

The South Carolina Senator Stirring Things Up—Wants a Special Committee Named to Inquire into Recent Reports of Speculation by Senators in Sugar Stock and as to Advance Information Furnished to Speculators.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—Senator Tillman, of South Carolina, introduced a resolution in the senate for the appointment of a special committee of five senators to inquire into recent reports of speculation by senators in sugar stock, and as to advance information furnished by New York speculators as to the sugar schedule of the tariff bill. Also to continue the investigation made in 1894.

SENATOR TILLMAN.

The resolution recites that one man is serving a sentence in jail, and that another was acquitted on a technicality, and provides for conducting the investigations so that all questions shall be pertinent.

Senator Frye in the chair promptly referred the resolution to the committee on current expenses, and Mr. Tillman was allowed to speak on the subject by unanimous consent.

Mr. Tillman made a very sensational speech. He said the democratic members of the finance committee were under a cloud on account of the sugar schedule of the tariff bill of 1894; also that the republican members of the finance committee were under suspicion. One party was as deep in the mud as the other in the mire, asserted Mr. Tillman.

Mr. Pettus (dem., Ala.) demanded that Mr. Tillman specify his charges so that the whole senate should not be subject to his sweeping assertions.

Mr. Tillman said the present tariff bill was made in the rooms of the Arlington hotel, with close connection by telephone and telegraph with New York, and in close touch with the Sugar trust magnates.

Mr. Tillman said Chapman was in a jail turned into a clubhouse, while the great magnate had gone free on a technicality.

Mr. Tillman produced extracts from papers showing that the Sugar trust secured the sugar schedule in the new bill, and also an extract from a paper making a charge that Senator Smith, of New Jersey, had been speculating in sugar.

Mr. Tillman closed with a declaration that the whole should either prove the correspondents liars, or prove the senators corrupt, and then turn them out.

Mr. Aldrich replied to Mr. Tillman. He denied that any person connected with the Sugar trust had anything to do with the making of the sugar schedule. No person except the republican members of the committee knew anything about the sugar schedule except Jones, of Nevada, to whom it was shown before its report. He wanted to say for himself and for the other members of the sub-committee that he had not bought or sold a share of sugar stock.

ARMED Men Guard the Town Against a Mob of Would-be Raiders.

CINCINNATI, May 28.—A special from Owensville, Ky., says that since last midnight Company E Kentucky state guard, have been in that town as a protection against a possible attempt to rescue toll-gate raiders from the county jail.

To-night armed men picket the approaches to the town and guard the courthouse and jail. They will be here till Monday or later. Gov. Bradley hurried them here on a rumor that a mob was forming to rescue Johnson and Jones, the wounded raiders.

Johnson and Jones both waived examination to-day and each was held in $3,000 to appear for trial in October and in $1,000 to keep the peace.

Ben Harmon, John Bailey, Thornton Stevens and D. Anderson Freehy, arrested, demanded immediate trial, but their cases were continued until Monday. Judge Gudger caused all persons entering the courthouse to be searched for weapons. None were found, but 100 big pistols had been deposited in a drug store.

Melton is said to be arranging his plans to go on a lecturing tour after spending a short time at his old home.

Pike received word from her that she will soon leave England on her long journey. Mrs. Langtry will spend most of her time here on her ranch in Lake county. DUN'S COMMERCIAL REVIEW.

The Volume of Business Much Greater than Realized by Those Who Reckon Values Alone. In Quantity There is Almost as Much Business Done as in the Year of Greatest Prosperity but with Small Margins for Profit.

New York, May 22.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade, issued to-day, says:

People are actually doing more business than they realize. They reckon by values, but these are much lower than in any previous year of prosperity and leave little margin for profits. In quantity there is almost as much business being done as the years of greatest prosperity, and though the increase in population would call for a material expansion, the comparison is not discouraging. The recovery is slow, hesitating and gradual, but more has been done on the whole in May than in April, while returns of April showed the volume of business only ten per cent. smaller than that of the best year heretofore. Yet hesitation is doing its work every week, and multitudes are waiting because of possibilities at Washington, who ought to be filling the demand for labor and the products of labor.

Events have proved that the crop of wheat going out is much larger than any of the markets expected, and western receipts for the week were 39 per cent. larger than last year, while Atlantic exports have been for four weeks 6,315,329 bushels, flour included, against 4,988,777 last year. At this season actual receipts count rather than predictions, and the truth is that the country has exported an extraordinary quantity of wheat and flour, and yet has so much to spare that the May option has declined nearly a cent for the week. Besides, the outgo of corn, largely taking the place of wheat in foreign consumption, is far beyond precedent or expectation, and for four weeks has been 9,860,091, against 6,001,985 last year. With liberal interior supplies the price has declined a fraction.

Cotton is unchanged, although at this season exports are insignificant.

Manufacturers have especial causes of delay owing to the possible competition with foreign goods largely imported, but there has been no set-back in prices, although cotton goods are at the bottom price. It is evident that production far beyond the consuming demand has forced the industry into a waiting attitude. Distribution of all dry goods is at present retarded also by cooler weather than is usual at this season. The woolen mills are producing more than they have done for years, though much less than they could or would like to produce, and manufacturers are doing almost nothing in the wool market. Speculation has kept the sales large, in four weeks of May 29,845,500 pounds, against 20,159,350 in the corresponding weeks in 1892. There is some weakness observable with western holders, and eastern prices begin to feel the weight of enormous imports, although holders still calculate on a rise as soon as new duties take effect.

The iron manufacture gains in spite of the closing of some furnaces. The production of pig exceeds consumption, and is somewhat decreasing, while the consumption has gradually gained this week, in part because of several structural contracts, including 7,000 tons for this city alone, and in part because the agricultural implements works have made larger demands, and also because of the proposals leasing of nearly all the rod some buying.

Failures for the week have been 214 in the United States, smallest in any week since September, 1895, against 239 last year, and 22 in Canada, against 20 last year.

CURE FOR LOCKJAW.

New Treatment Successfully Tried at San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 29.—A new treatment for lockjaw, or tetanus, has been successfully tried at the German hospital under the direction of Dr. Conrad Weil. The case is exciting a great deal of interest in the medical profession and among the friends of the hospital, as it is the first experiment with this new treatment west of the Mississippi, and one of the very few experiments in this country.

The patient who owes his life, as the physicians believe, to the new treatment, is Edmund Rhein, now about 23 years old, who received an injury to his thumb about a month ago. Doubt was entertained at first whether an amputation would not be necessary. This was avoided, however, but later symptoms of lockjaw began to develop. As the symptoms were severe at first, the ordinary treatment with sedatives was tried. The patient grew steadily worse, and Dr. Weil decided to try a new treatment. By this time the disease had extended so as to affect almost the entire nervous and muscular systems.

Within 48 hours, under the new treatment, signs of improvement began, and at the end of a week he was pronounced out of danger. Thursday he said he felt no symptoms of the disease at all, only the weakness which was the natural result of the ordeal through which he had passed.

The new treatment consists of injections of a tetanus anti-toxine, similar in source as the anti-toxine of diphtheria.

AFFAIRS IN ATHENS.

Elaborate Measures Taken to Preserve Order.

ATHENS, May 29.—Elaborate measures have been taken to preserve order. Besides the police and gendarmes, a civil guard has been selected from the most trusted inhabitants.

The minister of the interior, M. Theotokis, is resolved to deal severely with anti-dynastic movements. The fact that the warships at Pharos are ready to land troops and artillery in the event of disorders occurring has deterred the revolutionists.

THE "CURRENCY COMMISSION."

Incompetency of the Whole McKinley Party.

The republican party platform, it will be remembered, does not pledge the party to currency reform. The only change it proposes is the abolition of the gold standard by means of international bimetalism. On other questions of currency reform it is silent.

This fact compels the republican party in congress to defend the present currency system by refusing to take measures to reform it. Though the system is condemned by both people and bankers, yet the republicans cannot afford to place themselves behind any scheme of reform. They dare not make even an effort to concentrate on any position. They are afraid to endorse the proposition to retire the greenbacks; they cannot take a stand in favor of the restoration of silver, and so they are compelled to assume an attitude which makes their party the champion of the present system, which every body condemns as utterly inadequate.

The inherent weakness of the republican position is further emphasized by their effort to evade responsibility. They dare not bring the question to an issue in congress, and so they intend to hide behind the proposition to form a currency commission. The "currency commission" plan is a fraud and a sham in conception and purpose. It is nothing more than a plan to delude the people while the gold syndicate which controls the republican leaders greases the skids for the final slide to the gold standard.

The "currency commission" plan is engineered by the political bunko steers who had charge of the Indianapolis convention. It is an effort to postpone, to evade, to cover up the inevitable issue. It is falsely called "a business men's plan."

The men who are behind the "currency commission" sham are sneering at politicians, as our correspondent says, and at the same time begging politicians to endorse their proposition. They say it is not a party question, but it is most essentially and distinctively a party question. Currency reform is the main and most vital issue between the parties. The democrats have declared that the true remedy for present evils is the restoration of silver. The republicans, controlled by the gold syndicate, have contented themselves with declaring that, while the gold standard is a bad thing and ought to be abolished, yet they are in favor of it if we cannot have international bimetalism.

By advocating international bimetalism they deluded a majority of the people into believing that the European nations are willing to enter into an agreement with the United States. Such an agreement is an impossibility until independent action by the United States forces them to take steps in that direction.

Having appointed an international commission, the republicans are now on the point of favoring a national "currency commission." The democrats in congress will, of course, propose that scheme and expose it. The people who went to the polls last fall elected a congress to carry on the public business, and there is no reason why congress should not act, on failing to act, the burden of responsibility should not fall on the republicans.

A few more months of the gold standard, coupled with the effects of the forthcoming Dingley law, will find the people in no mood to be trifled with. Currency commissions and international commissions will cut small figure in the verdict they will pronounce against the republicans next year. They will condemn the McKinley party on the broad ground of general incompetence. Elected to restore prosperity, every scheme put forward by that party has been for the purpose of robbing or deceiving the people. Every plan of reform it has proposed has led to harder times, lower prices and lower wages.—Atlanta Constitution.

If Bryan Had Been Elected.

If Bryan had been elected and silver remonetized, farmers and producers would have received prices for their products that would have enabled them to pay their taxes and other fixed charges, and have had a surplus with which to buy the products of the mechanics, artisans and other producers, who are now idle because the farmer had to sell his products at the low prices resulting from the depreciated value of the dollar. If Bryan had been elected wages would not go down; in most cases they would go up, and although the increased wages might not more than equal the increased cost of the wage-maker's necessary expenses, there would be plenty of work instead of little, or none at all. If Bryan had been elected there would have been a boom in business before this time; money would be plenty; real estate would be in demand at good prices; factories would be running full handed, and business men and wage-workers alike would be enjoying the benefits of the restoration of silver to its old place as one of the primary money metals of the country.—Illinois State Register.

The senate seems to have learned intuitively, what Dingley did not know, that it is nonsense to speak of a protective tariff as one for revenue and that just in proportion as a tariff begins to be really protective it ceases to be a revenue producer. When the new bill goes to the conference committee the country will have an opportunity to see whether Congressman Dingley is too old to learn.—Detroit Free Press.

The republicans are in supreme control of the national government. They have had ample opportunity to try their hand, but prosperity has not come, nor do we see any sign of its coming, and we cannot even see the shadow of it under the far horizon. Meanwhile the silver sentiment is steadily growing and strengthening and the figure of Bryan as the man of 1000 looms larger and larger.—N. Y. World.

DIMETALLISM FOR NATIONS.

The Scandalous Farce of the Goldbug Charlatans.

Not all the concentrated gall and bold blinding spirit which ruled at the St. Louis convention was strong enough to carry the republican party through the programme which in reality lay at its heart. The choice spirits which pulled the strings and moved the puppets were as rank monometallic goldbugs as could be found in Lombard street or in the Bank of England directorate.

But there was just enough political sagacity to guide these master minds to conceal their hand in the adroit shadow of bimetalism by international agreement. During the campaign it was no easy task for the speakers to recollect at all moments the wide difference between the principles close to their hearts and the dogma of the platform set forth as stir up to catch flies. Often and often contemptuous expressions as to any coinage of silver except as token money would bubble up from the throat to the lips. The American Banker, Bradstreet's and the literature spread broadcast by the Sound Money league could not be bridled, but broke out in open sneers at any plans of bimetalism.

The ruse worked too well and many a voter who meant well for his country was caught in the specious rhetoric of the stump and cast his vote for bimetalism by international agreement. The fight was won by the aid of these misguided bolters who forsook the democratic party, the only honest advocate of bimetalism in the country. The pretended bimetalism won

PROSPERITY.

This is an oft repeated but seldom realized expression. When politics are running high each office-seeker promises to do all in his power to restore prosperity, when any individual or corporation desires anything at the hands of the public, this is the first thing assured. But is this the proper way for it to be affected; to place ourselves and our sacred rights in the hands of a few individuals? No; we do not believe so. That we are the founders of our own destinies, is an assured fact. This being the case is it not high time to wrench ourselves from our past methods which have proven a signal failure and anchor upon new ones, hit or miss. We have ever condemned the credit system of our country, wherein a man binds everything that he has upon the hope of being able to pay out. This of course bears heavily upon every class but especially upon the farmers, they who ought to be the most independent men on earth, and makes them the most helpless. They bind themselves heart and soul to their advances and few ever free themselves from this most unbusinesslike system. This we believe to be the chief cause of the prevailing hard times in the South. The laboring man bound to the merchant; the merchant to the wholesale merchant and they to the capitalist; thus entirely robbing us of any freedom whatever and making us bear the greater portion of the burden of taxation and profit for others.

Until we free ourselves from this curse and are somewhat independent we cannot hope to prosper. We believe, in the greater number of cases, poor judgment has been the cause of people becoming involved, and that is what we are directly trying to impress. Does it not look possible that every able bodied man can by perseverance and strict economy make a living? Then why not every man put his shoulder to the wheel with that determination and thus free ourselves and our country from this which we veritably believe to be a curse. Then would this not be a truly prosperous country? Would we be dependent upon President McKinley or congress, or even Mr. Hanna for measures to be enacted that would help our terrible condition? No, we could prosper or not just as we chose.

If rumors count for anything surely Judge John A. Campbell, of Calera, has hit the bottom round in his rapidly waning political career. His unsatiable thirst for office has led him downward step by step and last week he took the fatal plunge that landed him at the bottom, where he is likely to remain for all time to come. The circumference of the situation, as Rufus Sanders would put it, is as follows as stated to us by several Calera gentlemen: After many years of strife and contention the citizens of Calera decided almost to a man to lay aside their personal and political prejudices so far at least as the municipal ticket was concerned, and all united and put out a ticket composed of good men whom they agreed to support. Judge Campbell, however, concluded to get up a ticket of his own, and began industriously to circulate among his colored friends to see what they could do for him. He urged them to call a meeting and induce him for mayor. The meeting was called, but contrary to all of the Judge's calculations they unanimously endorsed the ticket headed by J. R. Pratt. Surely this is the last nail that can ever be driven in his political coffin. Let his epitaph be: "Dead, damned and delivered." Since writing the above we learn that Judge Campbell is an applicant for the postoffice at Calera. Shades of departed saints hover around and protect if possible the good people of that benighted city!

Huntsville claims the youngest confederate veteran in the country. He is John W. Mayhall, who at the age of 14 years 4 months and 7 days enlisted in Company H, Capt. Gales, Twelfth Alabama infantry, March 17, 1861. On the same day he and the command to which he belonged left Decatur for Richmond. He was at the first battle of Manassas, at the siege of Yorktown, battle of Williamsburg, Seven Pines, Malvern Hill, the second battle of Manassas, South Mountain and Sharpsburg. He was three times slightly wounded. Availing himself of an opportunity for a furlough, Mayall got a leave of absence and after a few weeks re-enlisted in Wheeler's Twelfth Alabama cavalry and followed Sherman in his march to the sea. After participating in several battles Mayhall surrendered with the Twelfth at Greensboro, April, 1865.—Talladega News-Reporter.

Most of the old confederate veterans of this county have sent in their names and expressed their willingness to hold a reunion here next month. Now that we know it is the wish of all, let us go to work toward getting in readiness for it and make it one of the most enjoyable events these old heroes have ever witnessed. Get all the distinguished men possible to address them on this occasion; secure a good band and by all means prepare a good dinner and their enjoyment will be complete.

An earthquake was perceptibly felt at Washington, Atlanta, Knoxville and many other important cities Monday. Everything was considerably jolted and shaken but no serious damage done.

SOUTHERN MANNERS.

From the Baltimore Sun.

The New York Journal of Commerce spoils what would otherwise have been a telling criticism of Senator Morgan's jingoism and advocacy of unsound finance by a bitter attack upon the manners of the old South. Senator Morgan deserves to be condemned for his efforts to embroil the United States in difficulties with European nations, but his conduct does not justify a sweeping condemnation of southern manners either as they were in evidence before the war or are in evidence now. The Journal of Commerce does, indeed, qualify its censure by the statement that "the new South is so far modernized and to so great an extent brought into harmonious commercial and social relations with the rest of the world that the few remaining survivors of the slave epoch are not uninteresting subjects of sociological study." To this it is sufficient answer to say that if the representatives of the "New South" have the manners of their grandfathers they will be equally as courteous, considerate and well bred as those more modern exponents of "good form" whom Ward McAllister had to take in hand and teach the elementary principles of deportment.

The cultivated southern man of the period dating from the Revolution to the civil war had all the qualities which are inseparable from good breeding, contempt for vulgar display, perfect courtesy in his intercourse with his fellow-men, a very admirable respect for women, and an utter lack of the coarseness of language and angularity of manner which in some quarters have come to be regarded as a commendable national characteristic, the evidence of a brisk "get there" Americanism. If the "Old South's" manners were of the plantation, it should not be forgotten that they were also the manners of Washington, Jefferson, Madison and Monroe, of Chief Justice Marshall and other eminent southern men, but for whom American history would be a dull and spiritless volume. If the new South, with its modern manners, produces men as great and patriotic as were born under the plantation system the future of this mighty republic will never be in peril.

The trouble with too many writers who condemn the manners of the "Old South" is their ignorance of the subject. They read some sensational work of fiction like "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and conclude that they have mastered the subject. Or, perhaps, they turn to some incident in congress in ante-bellum days, when the passions of men were aroused by political excitement and because there was a fist-cuff between two men from opposing sections they at once accept the offender as a type of the South and proceed to belabor the people of a dozen states for the violence of one man. The politicians of the old South were not always the best representatives of the southern people, although, in the main, they were men of high character, perfectly honest and unimpeachable courage. There were no Credit Mobilier scandals with them; no suspicion that they dealt in stocks which were affected by their legislation. The sons and daughters of the planters enjoyed the advantages of liberal education and travel and would have been at home in the most polished society of Europe without the coaching of a lordly Turveydrop. Moreover, the fact that New York's "Four Hundred" had to engage the services of a man of southern descent to teach them the amenities of social life would seem to indicate that the "southern manner" was worthy of recognition and emulation.

Miss Carrie Miller, a missionary matriculate in the Institute, boarded the train for her home in Easonville Monday.

Oscar Tinney was sent to Rock Run Friday as relief agent and operator.

Misses Ethel and Mamie Millstead returned home Tuesday.

Last Friday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock Wilsonville was wrought up over the largest fire, if not the only fire, she has experienced in several years. Dr. Edwards two story dwelling, half mile north of town, was completely destroyed. The fire was uncontrollable from the fact that it had secured a good hold on the building before the discovery was made by the inmates. Its complete destruction was effected in two hours. The origin of the fire was caused from soot burning out of the chimney; the sparks settling on the roof. A fire was kindled in one of the rooms on the ground floor for the purpose of ironing. On hearing the peculiar and characteristic roarings from the roof an investigation was made by one of the ladies who found the roof of the south end of the building to be enveloped in fire and smoke. Miss Mary, Mrs. Wm. Edwards and her two little children were the only persons on the premises at the time of the outbreak. Mrs. Mm. Edwards was deputised as courier to report the news to the town people. She reached the academy completely exhausted from fear of her children being burned, told the news of the sad accident to the school boys which was caught up by them and transmitted to all parts of the town by ringing the church bell. Men, women and children soon began to gather from all sources, presenting themselves as heroes in the forensic flames, but alas, it was too late; both water and human aid were looked upon as insignificant, the flames already licking through the entire roof. The only resort was to begin saving the household goods. After removing about half of the furniture and household supplies they were necessarily compelled to withdraw from the building, cut the fences and thus keep the fire from other property. There was no insurance and we should endeavor to assume a part of the doctor's unfortunate circumstances.

The closing exercises of the Wilsonville Institute was begun Wednesday and Thursday with oral examinations from the various classes. In the main these examinations proved very satisfactory, showing systematic and close application. Thursday evening the intermediates held forth; giving a nice enjoyable concert to a fair house of amusement seekers. Although many of these were unaccustomed to the stage, this being the first appearance of some, there was marked ability displayed. Last but not least was the final, or "Pink Concert", given on the following evening by the advanced pupils; at 8:30 J. H. Weldon lead the opening prayer. The curtain ascended and disclosed a handsome group of sixteen boys and girls, marching around the stage and finally halting to form a triangle and sing: "Away to the meadows." Pink suits with broad, black sashes loosely hanging from their sides and broad brim "La Taska" sunshades were the canopy of the girls' heads; each girl carrying a tinfoil reop hook resting on the point of the right shoulder. Black knee trousers, pink blouse waists, black sailor collars and cuffs to match, black sashes, "La Taska" sunshades and carrying rakes by side were the boys outfit. Recitations were introduced, also two splendid tableaux with calcium affects were interspersed. Next came the beautiful spectacular Hoop Drill. The little soldiers boys and girls wore themselves into various figures, forming arches and wheels. In conclusion going through the military exercise with "Capt." Jackson as commander. The best and most amusing feature of the concert was the sro-comic play: "Cousin Chrissy's visit from the country." Miss Georgia Pope as "Cousin Chrissy" was most pleasing. Indeed it would not be too ill-considered praise to call her an ideal comedienne. Her intelligent conception of the little country girl's nature finished out a thoroughly artistic performance. Pat McGowen played the role of benedict, father of Chrissy. He reflected credit on the play as a comedian and mimic of the country-man's brogue and maneuverings. Chas. Avery the polite waiter presented some of the most interesting incidents of the evening. Miss Juddie Kilpatrick, as "Martha," essayed the role of the aristocratic city lady in a graceful and easy manner. The remainder of the cast was good but showed dimly beside the principals. The people were very hungry for amusement as evidenced by an occasional outburst of laughter and loud applause from the audience. This is the third successful session of this institution under the tutorage of Prof. J. B. Kilpatrick and wife; the attendance each session has been about the best in the world for Lung trouble. The progressive ladies of Westfield, Ind., issued a "Woman's Edition" of the Westfield News, bearing date of April 3, 1896. The paper is filled with matter of interest to women, and we notice the following from a correspondent, which the editors printed, realizing that it treats upon a matter of vital importance to their sex: "The best remedy for croup, colds and bronchitis that I have been able to find is Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. For family use it has no equal. I gladly recommend it." 25 and 20 cent bottles for sale by J. E. Seale & Co. Druggists.

Mabel—Did you feel hurt at what papa said when you asked him for my hand? Milton—I didn't feel hurt so much by what he said as I did by the gesture that accompanied the remark. It was a Delsartian gesture, you know executed with the foot.—Boston Transcript.

Mothers whose children are troubled with bad colds, croup or whooping-cough will do well to read what Dr. R. E. Robey, of Olney, Mo., says on this subject. He writes: "For years we have used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and always keep it in the house. It is regarded in our family as a specific for all kinds of colds and coughs. "After using quite a number of remedies without any benefit she tried one bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm, and it has given entire relief." Chamberlain's Pain Balm is also a certain cure for rheumatism. Sold by J. E. Seale & Co. Druggists.

Your Boy Won't Live a Month.

So Gilman Brown, of 34 Mill St., South Garder, Mass., was told by the doctors. His son had Lung trouble, following Typhoid Malaria, and he spent three hundred and seventy-five dollars with doctors who finally gave him up, saying: "Your son won't live a month." He tried Dr. King's New Discovery and a few bottles restored him to health and enabled him to go to work a perfectly well man. He says he owes his present good health to use of Dr. King's New Discovery, and knows it to be the best in the world for Lung trouble. Trial Bottles Free at Parker & Armstrong's Drug Store.

Tuesday night the Southern depot at this place was broken into and several express packages and some money stolen. The thieves entered by breaking the lock on the colored waiting-room door and then crawling through the ticket window into the office. After obtaining all the booty they wanted they unbarred the freight room door and went out leaving the door open. Blood hounds were dispatched from Jenison but could do nothing with the trail. The exact loss has not yet been ascertained but it is thought to be fully fifty dollars.

Rev. J. A. Clotfelter, a young Presbyterian minister, a native of Georgia, but more recently of Birmingham, Ala., spent Sunday in town, and he informed us that he would preach once a month at this place having been sent here by the Presbytery. We extend to him a hearty welcome and hope that he may be pleased with his new field of labor. It has not been decided yet which Sunday he will preach. Due notice will be given.

Sunday while Albert Baker, colored, and family were at church someone entered their house and stole several articles, among the number was a shotgun. The alarm was given, and in a few hours the thief who was a mulatto negro was captured by S. K. Cross while attempting to cross the river. He had the goods in possession and Albert knew them when first seen. Monday Mr. Cross and Amos Glaze carried him to Columbiana to board a while with Sheriff Vest. He owned up to the deed and says that he has served a sentence in Pratt Mines for a like offense, and also says that he was sent to the penitentiary in Georgia twenty-five years for killing a white man, but he made his escape, whether this is true or not I don't know, but he looks to be a mean scoundrel and should be punished to the very fullest extent of the law.

Dr. Teague preached a fine sermon Sunday morning at the Baptist church to a very attentive audience. His subject was "Strive to enter in at the straight gate." In the evening he gave us a splendid lecture; subject: "Teachings of the Bible." Doubtless every reader of the Chronicle knows Dr. Teague and most of them have heard him preach and lecture both, and we shall not attempt with our feeble pen to write or pass any comment on either, but only say that all of those who missed hearing him should not do so any more if they want to hear something grand.

There is some few cases of sickness in our community, although none very serious.

JAKE.

OBITUARY.

In memory of little ADA BELL HOLLE, who was born June 20, 1885, and died November 13, 1895.

Ada, a flower that bloomed in June, And in November was taken away. And is now transplanted far above Where all is joy, peace and love.

Oh! how I miss you, Ada, dear, Your precious voice I cannot hear; Your sweet blue eyes that were so bright, You were the family's whole delight.

Those eyes that watched me to the last And knew the family well, How sad it was to see you go My tongue can never tell.

Oh! how I miss my child so sweet That always played around my feet; Miss every word she used to say, Oh! yes, I miss her every way.

How sad to see her empty chair— Her place is vacant everywhere— At the table, in the bed, And to think that little Ada is dead.

She was a precious child from birth; She is now no more on earth. But in heaven she will ever be, Oh! God, prepare a place for me.

Where can I go to tell my woe Or calm my troubled mind; To heaven at last, I hope to go, And there my darling find.

I hope to meet that lovely face And know it as before, Where there's no sickness, pain or death, And parting is no more.

Some say in heaven we will not know Our loved ones gone before, Oh! Father, let me know my child At thy feet implore.

Father do calm my aching heart And comfort me awhile; I'm living with the happy thought To meet my darling child.

I'll try to ease my wail of grief, I know she's found a sweet relief, And will be ever free from pain; My loss is her eternal gain.

Ada is now a little angel waiting for me On the beautiful banks of the crystal sea, No impatiently waiting my darling there, For a smile lights up her brow so fair, And she lives on the smile of the Saviour's love.

Who so tenderly called my child above. Ada is now a little angel waiting for me On the beautiful banks of the crystal sea, Forever free from sorrow and pain, Spotless and pure from all earthly stain. Never in erring's path to rove, Safe in the bosom of infinite love. Ever more, or more, walking in light, My little Ada robed in white.

—HER BEREAVED MOTHER.

The Close of the Mayberry School.

Our school for the past six months has been very successfully taught by Miss Minnie Pelham, of St. Stephens, Alabama. And the closing exercises on Friday night, the 7th instant, proved how thoroughly competent she is to train the minds of our children. She discharged her duties faithfully and the pupils advanced rapidly. She ruled her school room with the scepter of love and by this kindness she won the hearts of her scholars and taught the whole community to love and respect her; so friends and pupils were loathe to say that sad old word "good-bye, when the hour of parting arrived. While she skillfully trained them mentally, she did not forget the spiritual food, but taught them also many useful lessons in morals and manners.

When it became known that the school would close with a concert everyone was anxious to attend, so when the curtains arose at 8 o'clock p. m. a mass of people had assembled to listen to the well arranged program. The exercises of the evening were opened by the school reciting in concert the 23. Psalm, which was one of the most beautiful features of the entertainment. Each child rendered the parts assigned them in such a manner as to reflect credit upon themselves and teacher. There were recitations, songs, dialogues, tableaux, and a lovely flag exercise which should have touched the heart of every lover of this sunny land of ours, "This land of the noble free."

The music was rendered by Messrs. Jim M. Donough, and Henry Little, which added greatly to the enjoyment of all. Miss Minnie was assisted by her sister Miss Lena Pelham. The evening was enjoyed by every one who was fortunate enough to attend and the trustees are so well pleased with their teacher they are anxious to secure her services for another term. May God bless Miss Minnie, and crown her with choicest blessings is the wish of her friend and patron,
J. G. HARRIS.

CURRENT TOPICS.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF.

FIFTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

(Special Session.)

In the senate, on the 31st, no business was transacted, immediately being called out of respect for Decoration day. In the house, after a 15-minute session, the house adjourned to allow its members to participate in Memorial day exercises.

In the senate, on the 1st, John L. McLaurin, who succeeds the late Senator Earle, of South Carolina, was sworn in. The tariff bill was taken up and its consideration occupied the remainder of the open session. A short executive session was held, soon after which the senate adjourned. In the house the adoption of the conference report on the sundry civil appropriations bill was the principal business transacted, the most of the session being taken up by a lively discussion of the policy of Speaker Reed and the republican majority.

In the senate, on the 2d, Mr. Tillman secured the adoption of a resolution directing the judiciary committee to inquire into the recent decisions against the South Carolina dispensary law, with a view to reporting such legislation as might be desirable to enable the state to regulate the liquor traffic in its own way. The tariff bill was then taken up and its consideration occupied the remainder of the session. Much progress was made, one-half of the important metal schedule being completed. The house was not in session.

In the senate, on the 3d, after the usual exciting debate precipitated by Senator Tillman, consideration of the tariff bill was resumed, and ten pages of the metal schedule were covered. In the house several bills were passed by unanimous consent, among them one to make the $10,000 unexpended balance of the Mississippi flood of the sufferers fund available for the El Paso (Tex.) flood sufferers.

In the senate, on the 4th, speedmaking consideration of the tariff bill was resumed, but little progress was made on the tariff bill. Consideration of the metal schedule was completed and the first item of the wood schedule was taken up but not finished. Mr. Mantel (Mont.) made a plea for increased protection for the wool-grower, and Mr. Butler (N. C.) spoke in favor of an income tax. The house was not in session.

DUN'S COMMERCIAL REPORT.

A Careful Review of the Failures for May Reveals Some Encouraging Facts and Shows a Much More Satisfactory State of Business Soundness Than is Generally Thought to Exist in the Country.

NEW YORK, June 5.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade, issued today, says:

The statement of failures in May by branches of business gives much encouragement. In amount of defaulted liabilities the month was the smallest since September, 1895, in manufacturing liabilities the smallest since November, 1895, and in trading liabilities, the smallest since September, except the last month, since 1894.

Failures of general stores have not been as small in any month as May, 1897. In only two months out of 36 have there been smaller failures in books and hats, only five in groceries and not one trading class in that month has reported failures larger than in the half the preceding months, though in furniture, failures are rather numerous. In clothing manufacture the failures were few, being less than all but four months out of thirty-six; less than but five in chemicals six in woolen goods, seven in machinery, lumber and miscellaneous manufactures, and exceeded the average only in iron and cotton goods and earthenware, owing to a few failures of exceptional size.

Nobody can mistake the meaning of such returns.

The statement that, except for the temporary depression in prices, the volume of business transacted is now larger than it was in 1893, the year of greatest prosperity, has been questioned by some. But a comparison of prices this week in the leading branches of manufacture not only confirms the view, but shows a remarkable similarity to the course of prices in the earlier months of 1879, when the most wonderful advance in production and prices ever known in this or any other country was close at hand. The key of the situation is the excessive production of some goods in advance of an expected increase in demand. So, in 1879, consumption gradually gained, month by month, until suddenly it was found that the demand was greater than the possible supply. All know how prices then advanced and the most marvelous progress in the history of any country resulted within two years. Reports from all parts of the country now show that retail distribution of products is unusually large and increasing. There is no improvement in the market for farm products.

Cotton is not higher, and the belief that the next crop will be large in spite of the floods is, general, while the demand for goods does not change, although in this country it is large enough to keep the market for most goods steady. Nor is there any satisfactory demand for woolen goods, and the sales of wool for the week have been only 5,835,000 pounds and for five weeks 34,041,400, against 26,800,150 in the corresponding weeks of 1892. The transactions greatly exceed the demand of the mills, although these are larger of late, because manufacturers of woolen goods have steadily increased their orders.

The iron industry is apparently expanding production and is certainly getting larger contracts, in part because of very low prices, one cent being made for beams. Bessemer pig is stronger, and forge a shade weaker under pressure of southern anxiety to sell. The rail mills are all full, the Illinois Steel Co. having orders for a railway and bridges in Corea; and there is better demand for plates and sheets, and from makers of agricultural implements at Chicago for bars. Shipments of iron ore from Duluth far exceed those of any previous year, both the Minnesota Iron Company and the Carnegie mines shipping over 100,000 tons each week. While the iron combination has not yet been formed, expectation of it with a large demand has advanced prices of nails five cent per keg.

Tin is very firm in spite of a visible supply of 34,436 tons at $13.50 and there are large dealings in copper not above 11 cents for lake. Lead is in fair demand at $3.25 and tin plates are still selling at $3.30 for full weight American.

Crop prospects are so good that the rumors customary at this season receive no attention. It was stated a week ago that along the northwestern roads prospects were remarkably bright, and highly favorable reports have since appeared from Kansas and from Texas.

Failures for the week have been 241 in the United States, against 234 last year, and 32 in Canada against 29 last year.

A GRAND JURY'S DILEMMA.

Refused Access to Reports Necessary to the Performance of Their Duty.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., June 5.—The grand jury's investigation of the affairs of the failed banks has a view to indicting derelict officials has led to a very unusual dilemma. The jury found it needed the reports of the state bank examiner to the governor and sent to Gov. Clough asking for them. He refused to give them up. The jury then subpoenaed him. He responded, but came without the reports and refused to furnish them. Yesterday the jury reported its dilemma to the district court, where the matter will be argued on bench.

The Lynching of "Click" Mitchell at Urbana After Two Citizens Had Been Killed and a Number Wounded in an Effort to Uphold Legal Methods—The People Had Their Way and a Foul Crime Was Expiated.

Deaton, prosecuting attorney of Urbana, shot in the hip. Gus Wesler, of Urbana, shot in the face. Wm. Elliott, superintendent of the electric light plant of Urbana, shot in the face. Ray Dickerson, of Cable, shot in the shoulder.

Wm. McClure, of Urbana, shot in the arm. James Bowen, of Cable, shot in the left hip. Dan Graney, of Urbana, shot in the groin.

URBANA, O. June 4.—With threatening scenes on the streets and about the public square all night it was 1:30 a. m. when the first attack of the citizens was made on the jail and the military began firing. Over 20 shots were poured into the crowd and the mob was repulsed with deadly results, leaving two killed and ten wounded. Most of the wounded persons were innocent spectators, beyond the lines of the mob. Bell and Baker were killed instantly and when their bodies were picked up in the courthouse square it made the crowd furious. After the dead and wounded were cared for the crowd rallied.

It was daylight soon after 4 a. m. and the streets were crowded with working men and others long before 7 a. m. Everybody in the city was out when the lynching occurred, and in the bright daylight no masks were worn. The local militia had been on duty two nights, and they did the shooting. Gov. Bushnell had been asked for more troops during the night, and before 7 a. m. a company from Springfield arrived. Just then the local company was withdrawn from the jail.

Mayor Ganson met the Springfield company en route from the depot and sent these troops back, saying they were not wanted. The mob, seeing the way open, then secured a large sledge hammer and broke for the jail. The hammer was not needed, as Sheriff McLain delivered the keys and the crowd soon found Mitchell's cell. Throwing a rope over Mitchell's head, he was dragged out, receiving some kicks and blows as well as the outer door was reached the noose slipped off, and Sylvester Zimmerman tied it so securely as to receive the cheers of the crowd.

The rope was thrown over one of the limbs of a tree in the courthouse yard, Mitchell was jerked up until his head struck the limb and his neck was broken, and then his body dropped to the ground. The crowd repeated the jerking several times until they were sure he was dead. While the body of Mitchell was lying on the ground hundreds crowded about to see it.

The colored people were greatly excited. They had previously met and adopted resolutions for the punishment of Mitchell, but many of them walked about with their heads bowed. Women and children, as well as a multitude of men, witnessed the lynching. There was no attempt at disguise or secrecy.

The assemblage in the public square was as open as any public meeting that had ever been held in that place. The local militia company feeling the overwhelming public feeling against them, offered no resistance when the mob entered the jail or when the lynching was going on, and the Springfield company had been counter-marched to the depot.

An hour or more after the lynching Mitchell's body was picked up and placed in a rough coffin, but still left under the tree, where hundreds of people continued to view it. The wretch died without a struggle, as his neck was evidently broken by the first jerk.

Gov. Bushnell arrived here to-night to investigate the troubles and especially the action of the troops. While the Urbana company is overwhelmed with local sentiment against their action, they are also liable for abandoning their post of duty. Capt. Leonard withdrew the guards about 7 a. m. and the Springfield company took orders from the mayor instead of the sheriff when they turned back from the courthouse.

Gov. Bushnell was attending an encampment at Wooster last night, and was met by a delegation from here on his return to Columbus this afternoon. These citizens from Urbana asked for the protection by troops of Sheriff McLain, against whom life threats have been freely made during the afternoon, and if he were here to-night it is believed that there would be trouble again.

It is learned to-night that Sheriff McLain and Capt. Leonard left this afternoon at the request of citizens who feared they were in danger of violence to-night. They took supper at Springfield and left at 7:30 on the Big Four express for Cincinnati, but would not tell where they were going.

After the fatalities of the night it is known that Sheriff McLain and Capt. Leonard decided by daylight there need be no more shooting.

SOUTHERN WAR FLAGS.

Possibly They May Be Placed in the National Museum.

President Cleveland's Proposition That They Be Returned to the Southern States Annals by G. A. R. Men.

[Special Washington Letter.] Do you remember the great political excitement which arose in 1877, when President Cleveland proposed to return to the southern states the battle flags of confederate regiments?

The order, however, was never carried out, because it was countermanded before the affair could be attended to by department officials because of the remonstrance made against the move by G. A. R. encampments and veterans of the union army generally. Immediately the agitation for removing the flags and trophies of a like character to the national museum was begun, and pending a final decision in the matter, the confederate emblems, which had previously been in charge of the adjutant general's office, were removed and put under the care of the chief of the record and pension division of the war department, where they still remain.

Before the national museum can have the relics added to its collection of attractions a great deal of formality and congressional legislation will be necessary, and even should the move take definite shape, and a bill for that purpose pass at the next session, the large number of trophies of all sorts would require such a length of time and an amount of attention in arrangement, so that in no case will the museum, or any institution which may be designated as a permanent place of display, if at all, be apt to have the collection housed much within a year. A number of officials in the war department say that an attempt will be made to have the necessary bill framed and urged to a speedy consideration when the next congress meets. The confederate flags in themselves are no incumbrance, but relics of various sorts have accumulated until they hamper matters in a certain sense, and it is thought that if the bill can be made comprehensive in its nature much of an interesting historical character can be placed where better care can be taken of the relics and a proper display made which will be appreciated by the public.

Worn and raveling by the lapse of years, torn by shot and shell, some of them almost riddled with bullets varying in size from the ordinary musket ball to the minie, the confederate battle flags which were captured during the war, and such of them as are still in possession of the government, repose, carefully wrapped and folded, in large boxes among the archives and safe-keeping places, and there they will remain forever. Few people ever see them; very few know of their existence. The relics will never be placed where the general public may view them, unless indeed they may yet be placed in the national museum, together with the hosts of foreign battle flags captured in various wars, and hundreds of other relics with a historical record, which the war department has had in charge for years.

The sectional question has been uppermost in the minds of public men who had given consideration to the matter of a public display of these flags. The old confederate soldiers yet living would not want to see their battle flags placed on exhibition. One thing which becomes very dear to the heart of a soldier, no matter what cause he fights, is his regimental battle flag. Its loss is a humiliation. The public display of the captured flag would be a needless humiliation in the old age of the soldier. Therefore, because we are a reunited people, trying to forget and to forgive, leading public men have delayed, at least during the present generation, the exhibition of these relics of the civil war.

The officials of the war department want the flags transferred. An army officer near the secretary of war to-day said: "This subject has been agitated of late, more so than several years ago, and some steps should be taken towards a different policy, as no doubt there will, the way the matter looks now. The national museum is the proper place for all government belongings of this sort, even if they do call up morbid or ghastly reflections. They are interesting to most people, and, besides, better care could be taken for their preservation in an institution like the museum, which would be lacking in the war department, for reasons that do not need explanation. Take for instance the confederate flags captured from 1861 to 1865. A big percentage of them are almost in shreds, and even if they are packed away carefully there is chance enough for their complete destruction, which would not be the case if other arrangements were made."

In this connection there are numbers of relics scattered throughout the whole war department which have never been viewed except by a few persons, and then, too, the articles are of national interest. The weapons used by John Wilkes Booth in assassinating President Lincoln, with daggers and full murderous paraphernalia of the conspirators, have been in the hands of the judge advocate general of the army ever since the Mudd and Surratt trials.

There are 139 confederate battle flags in the collection and they come from many fields of sanguinary conflict. Twenty-eight separate regimental colors were captured at Gettysburg from those gallant southerners who charged so bravely, so manly under the command of Gen. Pickett. Longstreet's corps contributed the principal portion of the Gettysburg trophies, although several were captured from other divisions of the confederate army during the three days' fight. Undoubtedly the history of the capture of these latter would be the most interesting of the lot. If known, but standards taken in smaller battles appear to show the longer records.

The Wilderness battle yielded 12 additional flags as the legitimate spoils of war, and the heavier share of the remaining 129 became government property in the continual series of battles which took place immediately preceding the fall of Richmond.

A handsome representation of the stars and bars, which is one of the best preserved in the collection, and but little torn by missiles, is the flag of the Eleventh Alabama, taken in battle at Willis' Church, Va., June 30, 1862. A part of the Pennsylvania Reserve corps, commanded by Col. L. Magilton, made a fierce charge against the confederate lines, pushing back the opposing forces to the main body and then maneuvering preparatory to the advance into Maryland, which was followed by the battle of Antietam. During the charge a hand-to-hand conflict in the center of the line of battle resulted in the taking of the Alabama regiment's colors by Private Springer, of the Fourth Pennsylvania, and a short time afterward the prize was sent to Washington.

The history of the capture of each flag brings out the story of some deed of heroism on the part of the captor. For example, the "Louisiana Tigers" were famous confederate fighters, and the Thirteenth Louisiana infantry was in that fighting brigade. On May 12, 1864, in the vicinity of Spotsylvania Courthouse, Virginia, the Thirteenth Louisiana came into deadly contact with Birney's division of the Second corps. In the long charges and counter-charges which ensued among the briars and underbrush, Sergt. William Jones, of the Seventy-third New York, and Corp. Reynolds, of the Fourth Excelsior regiment, managed to secure their enemy's tattered forerunner, but one of the captors, Sergt. Jones, fell pierced by a dozen balls before he could realize what was gained. The emblem is well-nigh in shreds, and its streaming pieces are in keeping with the ugly battle ground where its capture was effected.

Another relic of the hand-to-hand fighting which raged for hours May 12, 1864, is the standard which the members of the First North Carolina followed into battle early on that day. Before the contest was an hour old the Second corps of Grant's forces was ordered to charge. "This time a private of a Kentucky state regiment distinguished himself when G. W. Harris, of the One Hundred and Forty-eighth Pennsylvania broke the hold of the confederate color guard and bore his prize out of reach. Unlike its mate, taken from the Thirteenth Louisiana, the North Carolina flag is in fair condition.

There is not a flag in the collection which does not bear a memory of the shedding of blood. The flags were defended bravely, even to desperation. They were captured by brave men of the same race of people. The history discloses the fact that even after capturing the flags many a federal soldier yielded up his life.

A flag with an interesting history is one belonging to a South Carolina regiment, which the "Palmetto" soldiers lost at Antietam, September 17, 1862. The number of the regiment and its corps or division are not inscribed upon the banner, and consequently are unknown, but it was opposed to the Thirty-ninth New York in the struggle, which made an unhealthy locality in the neighborhood of the "stone wall," as Private Hare, who was killed in the same battle, was the man who captured the bullet-scarred trophy.

What became of the stars and stripes which were captured on numerous battlefields by brave confederate soldiers? They are not on exhibition. When the civil war ended the union was preserved, and all federal flags captured were given back to the federal troops. Ultimately through the war department, they were returned to the regiments which had lost them.

Governor Joseph F. Johnson has been mentioned in connection with the presidency of our state university, but we do not think, should be offered the position, he would accept it. He is now filling the highest and most honorable office within the gift of the people of this state and he would not likely resign it to accept one less honorable.

The unusual scarcity of corn among the farmers in this section will no doubt cause them to be greatly tempted to feed their stock on green oats, and at the suggestion of a prominent farmer we caution them against feeding green oats, as they could adopt no better plan to kill their horses and mules than to feed them on green oats. A number of horses and mules are killed annually by being thus fed.

When iron and steel can be manufactured in Alabama, exported to England and sold at a profit, why should we be wrangling over the question of giving free iron ores to our iron producers, and in every other way enabling them to attain cheapness of production? Alabama is today the great competitor of Pennsylvania in producing iron. It is to-day producing it cheaper than any other locality in the world, and to quibble over the tariff taxes on iron under such conditions is simply to quibble over the offer of the best opportunities to our own manufacturers. —Philadelphia Times.

A "compromise" between the gold and silver democrats is proposed by John McLean, of Cincinnati, speaking especially for Ohio, and incidentally for the whole country. All that is necessary, he says, is that platform shall provide for the free and unlimited coinage of gold and silver, and that candidates shall pledge themselves to the principle of free coinage of silver. It may occur to some that here is a remarkable distinction without any considerable difference. Another "compromise" is that the money question shall be the main issue and must not be ignored anywhere. In other words, silver will take the hide and gold the tail, or gold will take the tail and silver the hide. —Judge.

In the United States senate, Tillman has returned to his pitchfork and "old Morgan gets up and talks to himself" on Cuban resolutions, and as to whether or not we really have a congress in session. But it is well it is thus, as this is an off-year in politics and the American people have reached that point where they are living in constant expectation of the development of something sensational either social or political. Here in our own state, since the doings of the last legislature have been aided by the state press until they have become "old straw," that famous report of Auditor White and the Randolph compromise are furnishing an abundance of material for the demand.

The interesting announcement has been made that wonderful Helen Keller, the 16 year old deaf and blind girl, will probably have charge of the New York library for the blind, when opened. Speaking of this Mrs. Lawrence Hutton, who has secured a fund for Miss Keller's education, says, "I think the idea of having Miss Keller appointed as librarian of the library for the blind an excellent one; I am not sure, however, that Miss Keller could accept the position at this time. She has a big task before her in her college studies at Harvard, which will take up all her time and energy for some time to come. But as the library is not to be opened for a long while, the situation will be changed considerably by that time."

THE TARIFF SITUATION.

From the New York World.
In the tariff bill as it stands and as it is to be "jammed through" by the senatorial combine there are three principal schedules—wool, hides and sugar.

The wool duties will levy a heavy tribute on all the people's clothing and blankets, but they will placate the wool-growers of a few states and secure the re-election of the senators who force their adoption.

The duty on hides will seriously cripple the export leather industries of the country and add largely to the price the people must pay for boots, shoes and all other leather goods. But this tribute must be levied for the benefit of the cattle trust or the sage-brush senators will withhold their votes and defeat the bill.

The sugar duties mean millions to the sugar trust, every dollar of which the consumers of sugar must pay. But the sugar trust owns too many senators—directly or indirectly—to be ignored. Its right to levy tribute must be guaranteed or no tariff bill can be passed.

This is the situation. It is scandalous, but it is a fact.

THE "COLONEL."

From the Selma Journal.

The "Colonel," that is of the Governor Atkinson sort, is purely an American institution which has existed ever since the Declaration of Independence. John Phoenix in his burlesque sketches, relates that when he was about to take a trip on a steamer from San Francisco, feeling lonesome as he watched the other passengers bidding their friends good bye, while he had no one to take notice of him, and not wishing it to be supposed that he was friendless, mounted the bridge of the ship and called out "Good bye, Colonel," and 170 respectable gentlemen raised their hats in response. No, no! Governor Atkinson has not created the office of "plain colonel." This office has existed in America for to these many years, and these colonels are increasing in force every day, and without being appointed by governors or any body else at that. It is one of the glorious privileges of the citizens of this "land of the free and home of the brave" that a man can just grow to be a colonel without appointment, election or ever having smelled a whiff of gun powder. There are certain requisites, however, necessary to wear the title successfully. It seems to be the unwritten law on the subject that no lean, lank, hungry looking person, can secure the title of colonel, "a good round paunch," as Shakespeare expresses it, "well-lined with capon" accompanied with a loud voice and a rubicund complexion, seem to be essential prerequisites to a colonelcy of the popular sort. Such a presence, especially if the person be in politics, is so awe inspiring that ordinary persons do not dare to address the owner as plain mister, they feel irresistibly moved to call him "Colonel." It is a disrespect to address him otherwise so marked that no good mannered person would think of being guilty of such a gaucherie. Railroad men, who use their private cars, are all colonels, of course. Entry into politics carries with it, ex-officio, the title of colonel, sometimes major, but not often. Who would dream of addressing a six foot congressman, with a verdigris to match, by any other title than colonel? The colonel, too, is apt to be a genial, good fellow, and very necessary in his way; in fact, we could not get along well without him. So here's to him and long may he continue to wave.

A NEGRO LYNCHED IN OHIO.

On the morning of June 4th at Urbana, Ohio, Charles Mitchell, colored, was taken from jail by an infuriated mob and hanged to a tree near by, despite the efforts of the sheriff and his force and the local militia. Mitchell had about a week previously criminally assaulted a Mrs. Eliza Gaunt, a white woman of the town.

Several citizens were killed and about 10 were more or less seriously wounded.

Commenting editorially upon the affair The Birmingham News has this to say:

A NORTHERN OUTRAGE.

The scenes which have been enacted in Urbana, O., within the past thirty-six hours but prove that the crime which leads to nine out of ten lynchings which occur in the South provokes even worse results in the North. There are fewer assaults made by negroes upon white women in the North because the negro population is smaller than in the South and consequently the number of lynchings resulting is necessarily less. If the Urbana affair furnishes a true instance of the indignation and rage felt by northern white men because of a flendish crime by a negro brute, it is safe to assert that did the North contain as large a black population as the South the proportion of negro lynching and the lawlessness attendant upon them would be much greater in that section than in this. It is a well known fact that the northern man who poses as the friend of the negro in the North likes him much less, as a rule, than any one else in the world after he comes South and acquaints himself with the characteristics of the African race. It is equally true that the best friend of the colored man is the southern white man.

As to the Urbana affair, it is far worse than anything of the kind that has ever occurred in the South, and write in northern papers who delight in pointing out "southern outrages" in connection with mob law should hang their heads in shame and forever hereafter remain silent. The object of the Urbana mob's wrath had been convicted and given the full limit of punishment prescribed by law. His trial had been speedy and no delay whatever had occurred to threaten to thwart the ends of justice. So on that score there was no excuse for the lynching. Yet the mob was so bent upon taking the law into their own hands that after many of their number had been shot down they overran the military, entered the jail, and, dragging out the cowering criminal, hanged him in the public streets. The lynchers were unmasked and the lawlessness proceeded. As a fitting finale to the mob spirit abroad the sheriff and military commander, who had resisted the attack, but failed in their efforts to protect the prisoner, were forced to flee from town to avoid being dynamited for doing their duty.

The attention of the editors of the Chicago Tribune and Inter-Ocean and those of the New York Mail and Express and other South-hating papers is directed to this affair. What excuses have they to offer?

Ray and Hicks is the style of the new lumber firm, these gentlemen having purchased the sawmill and timber of Glen Butler.

Saturday evening about 8:00 o'clock a sudden, peculiar and sad accident occurred in which Mrs. M. H. Fowler was the victim of death. The deceased had eaten a hearty supper, walked out on the south balcony, took a seat, inclining her chair slightly against the post and was talking to her husband, when he was summoned to the front gate by a negro man's "hello." He had hardly reached the front part of the house when he heard a terrible commotion. He hurriedly turned his footsteps toward the scene of the noise and found that his wife had fallen down the steps, striking her head against an immense rock. The husband spoke to her, as if her injuries were of small consequence, but no response came. Life had evidently left the body before its descent to the ground; the supposition being that the deceased had met her untimely death from heart failure.

There are some people who live in such a manner that which they die it is a delicate task to write and speak of their life. The deceased lived thus. Indeed such was the beauty of her character, that in discussing it briefly as is our intention to do—it will be difficult to write so as not to appear exaggerative to those not intimately acquainted with her. These lines, poor and unworthy of the subject, are not written for the ears that are cold and incapable of hearing; nor for the heart that is pulseless and incapable of being thrilled. But perchance some struggling way-farer may be strengthened and induced to take up afresh the burdens and crosses of life and bear them bravely and faithfully, as she bore them for many long years. The deceased had been a member of the M. E. Church south, for forty-seven years, in which communion she lived a faithful, consistent, beautiful life, leaving behind her the sweet savor of a good name and an influence that will fall with heavenly sweetness and saving power on her husband and eight children, upon whom the true devotion of wife and mother was bestowed. It was a severe shock to those who loved her so dearly, but they do not grieve as those who have no hope. They know that she has gone to be with God, and now occupies a mansion prepared for her. How fortunate are we.

Who hopeful lay our dead away
And look to see the breaking day.
Across the mournful tangles play
Who have learned in hours of faith.
The truth to flesh and sense unknown.
That life is ever Lord of Death.
And love can never lose its own.

The progressive ladies of Westfield, Ind., issued a "Woman's Edition" of the Westfield News, bearing date of April 3, 1896. The paper is filled with matter of interest to women, and we notice the following from a correspondent, which the editors printed, realizing that it treats upon a matter of vital importance to their sex: "The best remedy for croup, colds and bronchitis that I have been able to find is Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. For family use it has no equal. I gladly recommend it." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by J. E. Seale & Co. Druggists.

"Have Scriber, the author, and his wife made it up?" "Oh, yes. She now reads what he writes, and he eats what she cooks." —Tit-Bits.

"My daughter, when recovering from an attack of fever, was a great sufferer from pain in the back and hips," writes Louden Grover, of Sardis, Ky. "After using quite a number of remedies without any benefit she tried one bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm, and it has given entire relief." Chamberlain's Pain Balm is also a certain cure for rheumatism. Sold by J. E. Seale & Co. Druggists.

Mrs. Phoebe Thomas, of Junction City, Ill., was told by her doctors she had consumption, and that there was no hope for her, but two bottles Dr. King's New Discovery completely cured her and she says it saved her life. Mr. Thos. Eggers, 139 Florida St., San Francisco, suffered from a dreadful cold, approaching consumption, tried without result everything else, then bought one bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery and in two weeks was cured. He is naturally thankful. It is such results, of which these are examples, that prove the wonderful efficacy of this medicine in coughs and colds. Free trial bottles at Parker & Armstrong's drug store. Regular size 50c and $1.00.

LESS THAN ONE FARE

To San Francisco and Return—What the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Has to Say of the Trip.

To San Francisco and return at much less than one fare.

The Louisville and Nashville Railroad company has this to say:

On account of the International Convention of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, to be held in San Francisco, Cal., July 7th to 12th, the Louisville and Nashville Railroad company will sell tickets from Birmingham to San Francisco at the very low rate of $25.85.

Arrangements have been perfected whereby the above amount is paid for going passage, and the passenger is allowed to select the same or a different route returning at the same rate.

Upon payment of a small additional amount returning passengers can visit the North Pacific slope on the way home by way of Portland, Ore., and the famous Yellowstone National Park. Unexcelled transportation arrangements have been made in the way of special through-Pullman Tourist and Buffet Sleepers, bringing the cost of living in transit down to a comparatively nominal figure. The Louisville and Nashville and its connections have been named by the Alabama State Y. P. S. C. E. as absolutely the official route.

Florida, Tennessee, Georgia, South Carolina and other southern states have also named the above great popular highway as the official and most liberal and interesting trans-continental route. Just notice a few of the attractions that are put for the first time on record within the reach of almost every one: St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, Pueblo, Colorado Springs, Pike's Peak, Cheyenne, Salt Lake City, Gardfield Beach, Ogden, Sacramento, San Francisco, Portland, Yellowstone Park, Los Angeles, El Paso, San Antonio, Fort Worth, Dallas, New Orleans and lots of other big cities of our country, with their surrounding attractions. It is a great big bill of fare at popular prices. Grandest scenery in the world, best railroad service, congenial people, and low rates make the trip one of a lifetime. Don't make any mistake selecting your route. Get your sleeping accommodations booked early and save confusion.

Remember the dates tickets will be on sale, viz: June 28th to July 2nd, good to return until August 15, 1897. From Montgomery, Selma, Mobile, Florence, Huntsville and other points rates are based correspondingly low as from Birmingham.

Newspaper space is too limited to do justice to a description of a trip of this kind.

Get the nearest Louisville and Nashville ticket agent and have him tell what he knows of the attractions offered. They are all ready and willing to help you select a delightful route.

The undersigned will be glad to give full particulars and to furnish the populace at large and Endeavorers in particular descriptive matter, etc. The Sunset Coast is waiting to give everyone a hearty welcome, and the Louisville and Nashville railroad has made preparations to carry them in a manner befitting the occasion.

Commissioners' court is in session this week, for the purpose of allowing the tax collector proper credits for "errors in assessments and insolvents" for the past year; and also to receive and examine the books of the tax assessor for the present year.

The county board of education, held its regular monthly meeting at the court house Saturday. About the only business engaging the attention of the board was the arrangement of a program for a Teachers' Institute to be held at Montevallo, on the 25th and 26th, inst.

The special term of the Circuit court called for June 7th, was convened here Monday by Judge Brewer; but to cure some technical defect the court was adjourned until 8 o'clock yesterday morning; when the impaneling of the jury was begun. This was completed in the afternoon and the evidence taken up. The trial will probably continue another week.

Tax Assessor Pitts, of Vincent, came down Monday and filed his tax assessment book for the present year, which shows the value of the taxable property assessed by him to be as follows: Real estate $1,508,413.00. Personal property $2,332,229.00.—Total $3,840,642.00. Number of polls assessed 1,688. This shows a decrease in values since the previous assessment of 1896.

The children's day exercises at the Presbyterian church, Sunday night, were a perfect success. The children looked beautiful, and each acted their parts well. Miss Lucy Smith deserves much credit for giving us such a successful and enjoyable program. Mrs. Chatterton presided at the organ, and as usual the music was grand. Their receipts for the evening were $24.45—quite a good collection and a most successful children's day.

On last Wednesday morning little Sonnet Brand, who had been seriously ill for some days, passed into eternity. He was a bright, intelligent boy and had won many friends during his short life. His funeral services were conducted at the Baptist church by Rev. C. W. O'Hara, assisted by Rev. T. M. Wilson, Thursday morning, after which his remains were carried to the cemetery at this place for interment. We deeply sympathize with the sorrowing family in this sore bereavement.

In another column will be found the program for the confederate veterans' reunion to be held here on the 16th of June. The program has some very interesting features, notably, address by Senator Pettus, and other old war heroes. The committee on arrangement is expecting at least five hundred old soldiers and a crowd of two thousand people to be present, and will do everything possible to make it an occasion long to be remembered by every one who may attend, and especially so to the old veterans of the lost cause.

Card of Thanks.

EDITOR CHRONICLE:—Will you allow as space in your paper to return our heartfelt thanks to the good people of Columbiana and vicinity for their kindness and assistance to us during the illness of our little son! Language fails us when we attempt to express our thanks for their many acts of kindness in our great affliction.

E. W. BRAND.

LOUIA A. BRAND.

Items from Cresswell.

Miss Hattie Peyton, of Sterrett, has been visiting relatives and friends here several days.

John Chandler and Jim Samuels, of Childersburg, biked through our town Monday morning.

J. F. and Miss Jennie Bates contemplate a pleasant visit to Coosa county friends the last of the week.

G. W. Wallis Jr., and B. F. German were in Columbiana last Thursday and Friday on business.

"There is something wrong with the moral stage of society when a girl whose life is pure and unsullied allies herself with a man of doubtful character. The responsibility for such a state of affairs rests heavily on the women. If they would arise as one and say by their actions that only worthy men might dwell on the fair heights with them you would witness a social revolution that would be as refreshing to the world as the showers in the month of May."

Our people are talking of a picnic about the Fourth of July. Why can't we have a nice one? A Sunday school picnic, for instance; and have some good speeches on Sabbath school work, and work up the interest in Sabbath schools, not only here, but in general. Let some one make the move and all get to work and have a big picnic about Saturday, the 3rd of July, as the Fourth comes on Sunday; and then let us have some big preacher to preach us a big sermon on Sunday.

We hear it talked among the negroes that a negro was found in the mouth of some creek above here on the river, who had been cut open, his intestines taken out, his stomach filled with rocks, sewed up and put into the water. They say a mule was found tied to a tree near the place, supposed to be his. We have no certainties of the facts.

J. F. Bates and Miss Belle Coleman, G. W. Wallis, Jr., and Miss Jennie Bates, J. W. Wallis and Henry Coleman attended children's day services at Vincent Sunday night.

Warren and Will Coleman, from below Childersburg, were with relatives and friends here and at Vincent Sunday and Monday.

We notice in the Jacksonville Republican that Walter McGothen and Jesse Holt, a couple of Columbiana "coons" have been getting into trouble at Oxnana for driving beef cattle to market for other people, without their consent. They belonged to a band, which has been getting in work of a similar character in this county; but as the recent courts had convicted several members of the gang, they decided this was rather an unwholesome atmosphere in which to do business, and changed their base of operations. We sincerely trust they may receive their just deserts at the hands of the people of Calhoun.

'T WAS BUCKEYE DAY.

Large Delegations of Ohioans at the Nashville Exposition.

President McKinley the Guest of Honor—His Speech at the Auditorium—A Popular Ovation Given Mrs. McKinley.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., June 11.—This is Ohio day at the exposition, and large delegations of police, militia, members of secret orders and general visitors are here from Cincinnati, Toledo, Columbus and Cleveland, as well as the smaller cities and towns of the Buckeye state.

President McKinley and party arrived at the Union depot early, having made the trip by slow stages from Washington. They were escorted by the exposition executive committee to the Maxwell house, where they took breakfast, after which Gov. Taylor was received. At 10:30 the president and party, accompanied by Gov. Bushnell and his staff, were escorted to the Centennial grounds.

The streets were lined with admiring thousands, and as this is pre-eminently an educational center, a large portion of the crowds was made up of students of both sexes and of both races.

As the head of the procession turned into the main entrance of the exposition grounds a battery of artillery boomed forth the national salute of 45 guns.

It was within the grounds, and led by the Centennial chimes, which rang forth from the top of the Administration building, that the enthusiasm reached its climax. The enthusiasm was shared by the visitors to the full, and to them was the added incentive of the beauty of the buildings and the grounds which burst upon them for the first time. Certainly Tennessee in general and Nashville in particular, are justified in the pride felt and expressed over the work they have accomplished. The buildings—the Parthenon, particularly—are beautiful in design and finish, and are beautiful beyond anything contemplated when the exposition was in embryo, and filled with exhibits that would be creditable in any fair of any nation on earth.

PRESIDENT MCKINLEY.

The escort also included Gov. Taylor and staff, United States regulars and Tennessee militia. At 11 o'clock, in the Auditorium, addresses of welcome were delivered by President Thomas, Mayor McCarthy and Gov. Taylor, and responses were made by Senator Clark, of the Ohio commission, Gov. Bushnell and President McKinley. The president in his address expressed his appreciation of the signal honor accorded his native state, and congratulated the governor of Tennessee, the mayor of Nashville and the president and directors of the exposition upon the success of an enterprise which could not fail to result in improved business relations and a closer commercial union between the north and the south. Luncheon at the club house followed the delivery of the addresses.

There was great interest shown in President McKinley's speech, and he was greeted with much applause.

The President said:

OFFICERS of the TENNESSEE CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—American nationality, compared with that of Europe and the east, is still very young, and yet already we are beginning to have age enough for centennial anniversaries in states other than the original thirteen. Such occasions are always interesting and when celebrated in a practical way are useful and instructive. Combining retrospect and review, they recall what has been done by state and nation, and point out what yet remains for both to accomplish in order to fulfill their highest destiny.

This celebration is of general interest to the whole country, and of special significance to people of the south and west. It marks the end of the first century of the state of Tennessee and the close of the first year of its second century. One hundred and one years ago this state was admitted into the Union as the sixteenth number in the great family of American commonwealths. It was a welcome addition to the national household—a community young, strong and sturdy, with an honored and heroic ancestry, with fond anticipations not only of its founders, but faith in its success on the part of far-seeing and sagacious statesmen in all parts of the country. I am justified in saying that these anticipations have been grandly realized, that the present of this community of sterling worth is even brighter than prophecies of the past had dared to forecast.

The builders of the state, who had forced their way through the trackless forests of this splendid domain, brought with them the same high ideals and fearless devotion to home and country, founded on resistance to oppression, which have made illustrious the Anglo-American name. Whether it was the territory of Virginia or that of North Carolina, mattered little to them. They were eager to fight for independence and liberty, and in the war of the revolution were ever loyal to the standard of Washington. When their representatives served in the colonial assembly of North Carolina they chose—for the first time in our country, so far as I know—the great name of Washington for the district in which they lived, and at the close of the revolution sought to organize their territory into a state to be known as the state of Franklin, in grateful homage to the name of another of its most distinguished patriot commoners.

Spain had sought to possess this territory by right of discovery as a part of Florida. France claimed it by right of cession as a part of Louisiana, and England as hers by conquest; but neither contention could for an instant be recognized. Moved by the highest instincts of self-government and the loftiest motives of patriotism, under gallant old John Sevier, at King's Mountain, our forefathers bravely vindicated their honor and gloriously won their independence.

Thus came the new state, second only, then, of the new nation, and equal to it.

It has made a wonderful history for itself. Tennessee has sometimes been called the "Mother of Southwestern Statesmen." It furnished us the immortal Jackson, whose record in war and whose administration in peace as the head of the great republic, shines on with the advancing years. The century has only added to the luster of his name, increased the obligations of his country, and exalted him in their affection. Folk and Johnson also were products of this great state, and many more heroes of distinguished deeds, whose names will come unbidden to your memories while I speak.

Tennesseans have been ever volunteers, not drafted patriots. In 1860, when 2,400 soldiers were called for, 30,000 loyal Tennesseans offered their services; and amid the trials and terrors of the great civil war, under conditions of peculiar distress and embarrassment, her people divided on contending sides, but upon whichever side found, they fought fearlessly to death and gallant victory.

Now happily there are no contending sides in this glorious commonwealth or in any part of our common country. The men who opposed each other in dreadful battle a third of a century ago are now here and forever united together under one flag in a never-to-be broken union.

The glory of Tennessee is not only alone in the brilliant names it has contributed to history or the heroic patriotism displayed by the people in so many crises of our national life, but its material and industrial wealth, social advancement and population are striking and significant in their growth and development. Thirty-five thousand settlers in this state, in 1790, had increased to 1,100,000 in 1860, and to-day it has a population closely approximating 2,000,000. Its manufactures, which in 1860 were small and unimportant, in 1890 had reached $22,000,000 in value, while its farm products now aggregate more than $62,000,000 annually. Its river commerce on three great national waterways, its splendid railroads, operating nearly three thousand miles of roads, its mineral wealth of incalculable value, form a splendid augury for the future. I am sure no better workmen could be found than the people of Tennessee to turn these confident promises into grand realities.

Your exposition shows better than any words of mine can tell the details of your wealth of resources and power of production. You have done wisely in exhibiting these to your own people and to your sister states, and at no time could the display be more effective than now, when what the country needs more than ever is renewed confidence in itself. This exposition demonstrates directly your faith and purpose, and signifies in the widest sense your true and unflinching belief in the irrepressible glory of the American people, and is a promising indication of the return of American prosperity.

The knowledge which this beautiful and novel exposition gives will surely stimulate competition, develop your trade, increase your output, enlarge your fields of employment, extend your markets, and so eventually pay for all its cost, as well as justify local sentiment and encourage state pride.

Men and women, I see about me from all parts of the country, and thousands more will assemble here before the exposition is closed. Let ourselves and let them always remember that whatever differences about politics may have existed, or still exist, we are all Americans before we are partisans, and value the welfare of all the people above party or section. Citizens of different states, we yet love all the states. The lesson of the hour, then, is this—that whatever adverse conditions may temporarily impede the pathway of our national progress, nothing can permanently defeat it.

Generous was the applause given to the members of the cabinet and distinguished visitors, including Gov. Bushnell and staff of Ohio, while to Gov. Taylor "Our Bob" as they love to call him, a generous outburst was awarded. Commissioner of Pensions H. Clay Evans a native Tennessean, was also the recipient of hearty cheers.

Mrs. McKinley had wisely concluded not to accompany the party in the procession and great was the disappointment expressed at her non-appearance. When she did come it gave rise to one of the most delightful incidents of the trip. Gov. Bushnell was in the middle of his speech when a cheer, swelling from the back of the auditorium and thence communicating to the main floor and galleries showed that some event of extraordinary interest was transpiring. A moment later Mrs. McKinley appeared in the central aisle, leaning on the arm of Mr. James B. Dunn, and accompanied by her aunt, Mrs. Saxton, and Mrs. John Hill Eakin, the latter of Nashville.

Gov. Bushnell gracefully yielded the floor and the lady and audience was on its feet in a moment, cheering most lustily. The cheers were redoubled when this gentle lady of the White House reached the platform and the outstretched hands of her husband, who hurried to meet and greet her and conduct her to a seat by his side, secretary to the president John Addison Porter, and wife, being immediately behind her. A huge bunch of roses was handed Mrs. McKinley from the auditorium floor and as she bowed and smiled her thanks the crowd again broke into cheers. Incidental to the speaking which followed was the applause which greeted any reference to Tennessee's loyalty to the Union. And when President McKinley declared Tennessee's sons were now loyal to the core, and that this Union, a third of a century ago so nearly disrupted, was now bound to stand for all time, the boom of applause and the roar of enthusiasm was something long to be remembered and gratifying to every northerner present. After the conclusion of the ceremonies in the Auditorium, which were very much added to by the music of Innes' band, the president and some of his party visited the Parthenon, which is the art repository, and the Children's building and then repaired to the West Side club house, a handsome structure near the Administration building. In the ladies' parlor there Mrs. McKinley held an informal reception. Later, she and the president gave a reception to women only in the Women's building.

The news of the disaster on the frontier of British India has been officially confirmed.

INDIANS ENTER PROTEST.

Sioux Chiefs Claim Their People Are Not Treated Right.

Formal Statement Presented to Congress and the Secretary of War—Waiting for the Message.

(Special Washington Letter.)

The American Indians seldom have an opportunity to be heard, but they always have ample opportunities to suffer; and nearly all of the wars of the past 200 years have been caused by injustice and oppression, the white men being the original aggressors.

Recently there was a council of Sioux Indians at Pine Ridge agency, and they sent four chiefs to Washington to memorialize the congress for justice. They appeared before the senate committee on Indian affairs, and presented their memorial, which has just been printed. The document is signed by Red Cloud, American Horse, Clarence Three Stars and Patrick High Star. Their statement of grievances is, in part, as follows:

"For many years a number of our people have been employed and taken from the reservation to accompany Buffalo Bill's Wild West show for exhibition purposes throughout the United States and Europe. A plan was inaugurated to allow the Indians to trade out one month's salary at Rushville, Neb., before boarding the cars. James F. Asay, a white man, who was expelled from the Pine Ridge reservation for misconduct in 1891, has a deep-rooted scheme, and the Indians are coerced, and it is made compulsory for them to trade at Asay's store in Rushville, Neb., and pay for the goods they purchase the most outrageous charges or lose their position with the show.

"Upon the return of the Indians to the agency this man Asay is permitted to be present and collect bills against the Indians while final payment is being made, and in some instances Asay handles the cash and presides over the payment. Mr. Asay's conduct was such that he was, under the provision of the laws governing Indian reservations, removed from the Pine Ridge agency in 1891, but was still permitted to use the reservation at his convenience, to defraud the Indians by charging them exorbitant prices for goods sold under the Buffalo Bill trading combination, which seems too strong for the United States, then all this goes for nothing. A suit in equity should be brought against the Buffalo Bill Wild West company for every cent that has been paid the Indians in orders on Asay's store, and the amount due each paid to the individual Indian who rendered service in cash as per contract. An investigation will bring out more facts in connection with this robbing scheme. Asay should be kept off the reservation altogether; his removal from the Indian country was a step in the right direction.

"There is a clause in the printed forms of the contract for beef which reads as follows: 'That the beef cattle under this contract shall be good, healthy, merchantable steers and cows (no bulls or stags) not over seven years of age.' 'Among the cattle received from the contractor since July 1, 1896, there have been old oxen, straight bulls, fresh cut bulls, and stags, old, poor cows that were not able to make the journey from the agency beef corral to the several issue stations—slaughterhouses—on the reservation. The cattle received for issue on February 18 and 20, 1897, were so poor that they dropped dead near the Holy Rosary mission school, but were dressed and issued to the Indians as merchantable beef. It was a disgrace to contract requirements. Other cattle died while en route to Porcupine and Medicine Root; and at this issue old bulls, some fresh cut, some in sexual prime, were conspicuous and served as an issue of merchantable steers and cows (no bulls or stags) not over seven years of age.

In giving testimony before the committee on Indian affairs, American Horse said: "I am 76 years old and cannot see very well. The light hurts my eyes. I was born on Bluewater creek, which is a branch of the Platte river. It is about 15 miles from the place Gen. Harney called the Rosebud Indians. I have usually lived in the vicinity of the Black Hills. The Great Creator provided us abundantly with buffalo and deer, and the trees gave us their fruit. The white man came and despoiled us. I first came here to see President Grant, and all the other presidents have considered me their friend. I have been on Rosebud agency for 28 years. I now come, as an old man, pleading for my people. We do not want our lands allotted to us in severalty. We are willing to become farmers, as our white brothers demand, but the lands are bad and fit only for grazing and raising cattle and horses. We have tried to plant, but the sun in July and August scorches everything. There is not enough water for agricultural life. There are only a few places where even the cattle can get a living in summer time.

"You see, I am very old and unfit to go anywhere, but my people urged me to come and shake your hand and beg you to help my people. I want the good white men in congress to let us have our lands in common. You have taken a whole continent. Can you not let our little remnant live in peace?"

"The white men who came among us when we were wild and married our maidens are now a part of our tribe, and we want them and their children protected. But we want no more white men to come among us. They marry our girls merely to obtain tribal rights, and then they cheat us out of our best lands. If we punish them or drive them out you send a big army. We want you to keep them all away from us and let us live in peace."

Senator Pettigrew asked about the sun dance, and American Horse said: "The sun dance is a period of religious excitement. Your missionaries told us the Saviour will come again. Sometimes our young men think that He is coming, and they dance and have a good time. It is all right."

C. C. DuBOISE, PROPRIETOR.

COLUMBIANA, JUNE 17, 1897.

Broadstreet reports business better today than this time last year.

It is estimated that 50,000 people gathered in Nashville last Friday to hear President McKinley speak.

Ohio will doubtless play shut-mouth in future about lynching negroes in Alabama until, at least, she has cleared her own skirts.

Saturday suits amounting to $50,000 were filed against the Southern Railway Company by the administrators of Bruce Phillips and Lizzie Powell deceased, both of whom were killed in the Cahaba wreck some months ago. These are the first suits filed against the Southern Railway; all previous having been against the L. & N. as it was their train that was wrecked.

In his speech at the Nashville Centennial last Friday President McKinley spoke thus of Tennessee's noble record of statesmen: "Tennessee may well be proud of the heroic names contributed to history and the patriotism displayed by it in our national life." He declared that her sons were loyal to the core and that this union, a third of a century ago nearly disrupted, was bound to stand for all time.

A Birmingham Greek, went to the seat of war, expecting to aid his native country in its struggle with the Turks, writes back to friends in Birmingham that he made a mistake. He, with several thousands of like minded patriots assembled at the Piræus, not knowing what to do, and having no one to turn to, as the Grecian government seems to have no use for him. The government seems to regard the American contingent of Greeks as suspects. This is pretty hard on men who crossed the sea to lay their lives on the altar of their country's liberty.—Mobile Register.

The twenty-sixth annual session of the Alabama Press Association which met last week in Florence shall ever be remembered by those in attendance as a session, not only fraught with many suggestions valuable to the association, but especially for the many pleasant recollections of this fair city and her good citizens. Fair Florence situated on the banks of the beautiful Tennessee has ever been noted for the galaxy of brilliant, noble statesmen she has furnished. Within her limits now reside some of the best talent of our state and in point of high-toned, cultured citizens she cannot be excelled. In this beautiful place, entertained by these noble people the press of Alabama has been honored. While there we have shown every courtesy within the power of her people and our short stay will never be forgotten. Should we fail also to thank the citizens of Nashville for their kindness and generosity we would fall far short of our duty. Within her limits we were given full sway and cordially invited to call upon every place of interest. On the whole the entire trip was one of pleasure and shall ever remain green in our memory as a most enjoyable occasion.

DOES FARMING PAY?

From the Montgomery Advertiser.
One of the most surprising things in the South today to the intelligent observer is the total abandonment by the youth of the section, of agriculture as a means of support.

It was only a generation ago that plantations in the black belt of Alabama were owned and operated by the most cultivated, intelligent, and well-to-do men of the state. One desiring to borrow money went at such times to the country rather than the city—to the rich planter rather than the banker.

Today farming is just as remunerative. The soil is just as fertile—the climate just as propitious, and labor almost if not quite as cheap.

Why, then, is it that life in the country is tabooed and a young farmer one who can manage labor successfully and conduct a plantation in a practical manner—looked upon as an object of curiosity—mingled with a suggestion of pity? There are a few young men in this immediate vicinity who have the business sagacity to perceive that the prospective advantages of agricultural life far outweigh the future in the business or mercantile field. They are in active charge of plantations near the city—they are making practical farmers of themselves—they are leading independent, healthful lives and buying more land each year with their earnings. Their comrades have gone, as clerks, into the railroad offices or the stores of the city—are earning but little more than the bare cost of living—are accounted most fortunate if in two years they get a week's vacation in which to spend all their earnings—and are frightened at the unexpected approach of their employer at all times. In fifteen years they will be worn out old men—mechanical contrivances for doing a certain stipulated task—barely living within their modest income, and in continual fear lest their place shall be filled with a younger man.

And the young men on the plantation will be influential land owners, with an assured income—a "sound mind in a sound body"—both prosperous and happy—of use to themselves, their families and the communities in which they live.

LESS THAN ONE FARE

To San Francisco and Return—What the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Has to Say of the Trip.

To San Francisco and return at much less than one fare.

The Louisville and Nashville Railroad company has this to say: On account of the International Convention of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, to be held in San Francisco, Cal., July 7th to 12th, the Louisville and Nashville Railroad company will sell tickets from Birmingham to San Francisco at the very low rate of $25.85.

Arrangements have been perfected whereby the above amount is paid for going passage, and the passenger is allowed to select the same or a different route returning at the same rate.

Upon payment of a small additional amount returning passengers can visit the North Pacific slope on the way home by way of Portland, Ore., and the famous Yellowstone National Park. Unexcelled transportation arrangements have been made in the way of special through Pullman Tourist and Buffet Sleepers, bringing the cost of living in transit down to a comparatively nominal figure. The Louisville and Nashville and its connections have been named by the Alabama State Y. P. S. C. E. as absolutely the official route.

Florida, Tennessee, Georgia, South Carolina and other southern states have also named the above great popular highway as the official and most liberal and interesting trans-continental route. Just notice a few of the attractions that are put for the first time on record within the reach of almost every one: St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, Pueblo, Colorado Springs, Pike's Peak, Cheyenne, Salt Lake City, Garfield Beach, Ogden, Sacramento, San Francisco, Portland, Yellowstone Park, Los Angeles, El Paso, San Antonio, Fort Worth, Dallas, New Orleans and lots of other big cities of our country, with their surrounding attractions. It is a great big bill of fare at popular prices. Grandest scenery in the world, best railroad service, congenial people, and low rates make the trip one of a lifetime. Don't make any mistake selecting your route. Get your sleeping accommodations booked early and save confusion.

Remember the dates tickets will be on sale, viz: June 28th to July 2nd, good to return until August 15, 1897. From Montgomery, Selma, Mobile, Florence, Huntsville and other points rates are based correspondingly low as from Birmingham.

Newspaper space is too limited to do justice to a description of a trip of this kind.

See the nearest Louisville and Nashville ticket agent and have him tell what he knows of the attractions offered. They are all ready and willing to help you select a delightful route.

The undersigned will be glad to give full particulars and to furnish the populace at large and Endeavorers in particular descriptive matter, etc. The Sunset Coast is waiting to give everyone a hearty welcome, and the Louisville and Nashville railroad has made preparations to carry them in a manner befitting the occasion.

WASHING BLANKETS.

Summer is the best time for washing blankets. To do the work satisfactorily fill a tub half full of soft hot water in which half a bar of Ivory soap has been dissolved, and wash gently with the hands. Rinse soap and hard rubbing ruins blankets. When clean rinse well, hang on the line in the sun. As soon as dry, fold evenly and put away securely in a box or closet. Blankets washed thus will remain fresh and soft for years.

ELIZA R. PARKER.

An Odd Genius.

The papers are full of tales just now of how the late composer, Brahms, treated pianists and singers who were eager to get his criticism. If one of these aspirants for his favor was fortunate enough to find him at home and be received, Brahms' first concern was to seat himself on the lid of his piano, a position from which he rightly deemed few would dare complete to oust him. If this failed he had recourse to the statement that the instrument was out of tune. "Oh, that does not matter," remarked one courageous individual, "I happen not to you, but my key to me," replied the master. On one occasion he was just leaving his house when a long-haired youth, with a bundle of music under his arm, hailed him with: "Can you tell me where Dr. Brahms lives?" "Certainly," answered the master, in the most amiable manner; "in this house up three flights," and so saying he hurried away.—San Francisco Argonaut.

The Grain-O-Lav Suit.

Rochester, N. Y., May 19, 1897.—The great $50,000 damage suit instituted by a Michigan Cereal Co. against the Genesee Pure Food Co. is at an end. They settled it and took it out of court for the ridiculously small sum of $500 and, as a practical result, Grain-O is in greater demand than ever. The new plant only just completed is to be duplicated so that not only the old friends of the delicious food drink which completely takes the place of coffee, but the new friends it is making every day, can be supplied. The beverage which the children as well as the adult, may drink with benefit will be furnished in unlimited quantities.

Suits may come and suits may go, but Grain-O goes on forever.—N. Y. Mail and Express.

Spirituous Sarcasm.

"I wonder," said Mr. Drinkmore, as he filled his glass with beer, "if you are an expert, I wonder who started the custom of calling a drink of liquor a 'smile'?"

"I wouldn't call that one there a smile," said the bartender, "it's the first of a horse laugh."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Taking Time by the Forelock—"I have just been at my usual place and found him buying me a new jacket." "What! in the spring?" "Oh, it will be winter before I worry him into doing it."—Judy.

Popular with Hunters.

The most popular hunting rifles are made by the Winchester Repeating Arms Co., New Haven, Ct. Their light, modern, high powered small caliber rifles have revolutionized gun making and are fast supplanting all other makes. The Winchester Models '94 and '95 do terrific execution. They will kill at distances where big bore guns would not hit. They are the most popular with the most successful hunters on account of their accuracy at short and long distances and their tremendous killing power. Send for a large illustrated catalogue describing them.

She was reading in a low thrilling voice: "When the packing begins in earnest, it seems as though the world were not on earth's surface unshaken." He roused himself from a somnolent attitude on an easy chair. "Who wrote that, Maria? He's been through it, whoever he is. I wonder whom he married?" "Why, the great stupid," said she, "it's Nansen writing about the ice."—Household Words.

Life as They Live It in the Rocky Creek Country.

The Plain American Boy and the Watermelon Vine.—The Most Polite Man.—The Time to Have Fits.

Hit is one of the most stranger things in the round discovered world to me how deep and constant and fervent the average American boy and the juicy fruits of the watermelon vine. I don't say have any serious objections now, and can most in general always climb up around my share if everything comes plum handy and convenient. But I don't hunger and thirst and pant for the fruit of the vine like I use to back there in my boyhood days. Sometimes I do dally with it like I could get as hungry and eat as much, and then feel as snug and comfortable and happy about it as I did when I was nothing but a plain and healthy human boy.

He Didn't Have the Heart.

One long and hot and sweltering summer day some six or seven years ago, I was making a trip through the country somewhere close along about the border line between the states of Alabama and Mississippi. The road was tremendous rough and lonesome, but along towards noon I rid by one of the most loveliest little valley farms I had ever seen in all my born days. I was so busy looking at the grove crops and the cozy fixments around the place till I rid right up in ten feet of a yearling boy before I knew there was such a human being in all them parts. There wasn't anything particular notorious about the boy's general appearance. With his homespun breeches and his home-knit galluses on, and a wool hat which had long since went to seed—he was a fair sample of the hundreds and thousands of country boys who are coming along with the rising generation to fashion the future and shape the destiny of this great country.

But in other ways that boy was a perfect picture of sufferin' and sorrow, and I couldn't help from slowing up long enough to find out what was the matter with him. He was hunkered down in the cotton patch, just over the fence—in the brin hot sun—cryin' and blubberin' and goin on like his heart would break, and sweatin forth great drops of perspiration as big as glass marbles. He was so busy with his troubles he didn't see me till I held in my horse and spoke—when I never saw him till I heard his sobs and sighs and moanin just over the fence.

"Hello, there, Buster!" says I, speaking in as bright and cheerful as I could. "What seems to be the matter with you this large and lovely summer day?" he was a fair sample of the hundreds "Hit's a plenty the matter, mister, a God's plenty," says the boy, as he turned around and squeezed the back water out of his eyes with the knuckles of his left hand.

"Well, out with the tale of woe," says I. "Tell me your troubles, and then if you don't see what you want ask for it."

"You see this here cotton patch, mister?"

"Yes, I saw the cotton patch. Well, the old man turned me in here day before yistiddy mornin to chop out this cotton. Hit was in the general orders that I must cut up every watermelon vine in the whole two acres, or take a lickin for every one I left. Hit has been worse than sheddin eye teeth to carry out them orders, and I have been achin all over from that munit till now. Down there by that old gum stump I found one orful pritty vine. Hit was sorter hid out amongst the bushes, and consequentially I left it, thinkin maybe the old man wouldn't find it. But he come out here this mornin noshin about and pirootin around, and by hokeys he found it—which he didn't do a blame thing to me then but give me the most hellatious hard lickin a white boy ever toted out of those woods."

"We have got a regular watermelon patch over there on the hill, and if the season's but right I reckon we will have dead oodles of 'em when they get ripe. But they do grow so rank and rapid down here in the bottom, and it don't look to me like it would hurt nothin to leave a few here and fling them in for good measure."

"You can see I am not done choppin the cotton, and here is the last and longest and the finest watermelon vine in the patch," the boy went on, between his sobs, as he pointed out a particular promisin vine. "Look at the blooms and young uns on it, won't you? Hard and unreasonable aint the words, mister, but I have got to do one of two things to-day—chop up that watermelon vine or stand and take another lickin. Which would you do, mister, if you was me?"

"Spit in my hands and shet my eyes and chop it up," says I.

"Tain't no use in talkin', mister, I jest simply aint got the heart to do that. Two lickins aint but twicest as bad as one, though I know the next one is bound to be a shirt-scorcher. Hit's orful, orful, orful, any way you take it. Say, mister, if you aint in too much hurry, would you mind to dismount and chop it up for me? You can take my hoe and do the bloody work whilst I look toter way."

So, as nothin else would answer, I dismounted and got down and took the hoe. The poor, unhappy boy turned his back and wept whilst I chopped up that "lovely watermelon vine."

Then as I mounted and rid on towards the sunset hills the boy breshed the tears away and resumed.

"The Most Polite Man."

In my day and generation, first and last, I have been about considerable. And I reckon what little I haven't learnt in regards to dogs and horses and men and things in general was tore out of the books many years ago. But I do think the most polite man I have ever saw since here I have been is old Col. Jeems M. Hunter—which the colonel now lives on his fine plantation over on Bear Creek, and on the interest which his money draws. He is one of these old-time, before-the-war gentlemen—Col. Hunter is—and without any doubts the most serenely and superbly polite old rooster you would meet up with in a whole year's travel.

Now in his old days the mainest weak pints with Col. Hunter is his long toddy and his fine saddle horse. Along in the past Christmas he lit out one day, and the next news we got he had went over to "Old Kaintucky" and bought himself a ride with the finest saddle horse that money could fetch—a big brown geldin with black trimmings and a blaze face—as graceful as a deer and as gentle as a cat. Now every mornin by the first crack of day the old colonel is up and out takin his mornin ride and braggin on Brown Tom to everybody that will give him a chance.

One mornin last week he met up with Blev Scroggins down at the old Beech Lord, and nothin would do but Blev must halt and git down and pass on all the strong and winnin pints of that fine saddle horse.

"Have you got your weapon with you, Blev?" says the colonel.

Naturally of course Blev had his six-shooter strapped under his left arm.

"By gads, Blev, I don't raley believe Brown Tom would git skeered of a cyclone spiked with cannons, but I never did try him to see how he would stand fire. I wish you would please be so kind, condescendin and obligin as to shoot off your weapon, so I can see what he will do."

At the word Blev went down after his weapon with great glee. With pure

SHERMAN'S REPORT.

A Review By the Secretary of State of the Negotiations Culminating in the Treaty—A Free and Independent State Seeking Annexation to the United States.

WASHINGTON, June 18.—Accompanying the president's message and the Hawaiian treaty, assent to the senate, was the following report from Secretary Sherman:

To the President: The undersigned, secretary of state, has the honor to lay before the president, for submission to the senate, the Hawaiian treaty, the public interest to do so, a treaty signed in the city of Washington on the 16th inst. by the undersigned and by the duly empowered representatives of the Kingdom of Hawaii, and the islands constituting the said Republic of Hawaii and all their dependencies are fully and absolutely ceded to the United States of America forever.

It does not seem necessary to the present purpose of the undersigned to review the incident of 1893 when a treaty of cession was signed on February 14 and submitted to the senate, being subsequently withdrawn by the president on the 6th of March following. The negotiation which has culminated in the treaty now submitted has not been a mere resumption of the negotiation of 1893, but was initiated and has been conducted upon independent lines. There is an abrupt revolutionary movement had brought about the overthrow of the late queen, and set up, instead of the heretofore titular monarchy, a provisional government, for the control and management of public affairs and the protection of the public peace, such government to exist only until terms of union with the United States should have been negotiated and agreed upon.

Thus self-constituted, its promoters claimed for it only a de facto existence until the purpose of annexation in which it took rise should be accomplished. As time passed and the plan of union with the United States became an uncertain contingency, the organization of the Hawaiian commonwealth underwent necessary changes. An emergency convention of first convened to a permanent session, under a constitution framed by the representatives of the electors of the islands, administration by an executive council, not by suffrage, for the law and maintaining peace within the islands and parliamentary regime; and the ability of the new government to hold as the Republic of Hawaii—an independent place in the world.

Now, however, the Republic of Hawaii approaches the United States as an equal, and points for its authority to that provision of article 2 of the constitution promulgated July 24, 1890. The president, with the approval of the cabinet, is hereby expressly authorized and empowered to make a treaty of public and commercial union between the Republic of Hawaii and the United States of America, subject to the ratification of the senate.

The present negotiation is, therefore, as has been said, not a mere renewal of the tender of Hawaiian territory in 1893, but has responded to the purpose declared in the Hawaiian constitution, and a conference of the plenipotentiaries of the two governments, with the advantages of the political and the commercial union alternative proposed here relatively considering the scope and extent thereof. It appears to me that the negotiation of a commercial union on the lines of the German Zollverein could not satisfy the problems of the administration in Hawaii and of the policy of the United States, and that a commercial union would, on the one hand, deprive the Hawaiian government of its chief source of revenue from customs duties by placing its territory in a relation of free exchange with the territory of the United States, its main market of purchase and supply, while on the other hand it would entail upon Hawaii the maintenance of an internal revenue system on a par with that of the United States, or else involve the organization of a corresponding branch of our revenue service within a foreign jurisdiction. We have had no precedent for such a union.

It is to be "jammed through" by the senatorial combine there are three principal schedules—wool, hides and sugar. The wool duties will levy a heavy tribute on all the people's clothing and blankets, but they will placate the wool growers of a few states and secure the reelection of the senators who force their adoption. The duty on hides will seriously cripple the export leather industries of the country and add largely to the price the people must pay for boots, shoes and all other leather goods. But this tribute must be levied for the benefit of the cattle trust or the sagebrush senators will withhold their votes and defeat the bill. The sugar duties mean millions to the sugar trust, every dollar of which the consumers of sugar must pay. But the sugar trust owns too many senators—directly or indirectly—to be ignored. Its right to levy tribute must be guaranteed or no tariff bill can be passed. This is the situation. It is scandalous, but it is a fact.—N. Y. World.

foreign nations and the extension to the islands of the treaties of the United States. This leaves congress free to deal with such special regulation of the contract labor system of the islands as circumstances may require. There being no general provision of existing statutes to prescribe the form of government for newly incorporated territory, it was necessary to stipulate, as in the dominion precedent, for continuing the existing machinery of the government and laws in the Hawaiian islands until provisions shall be made by law for the government, as territory of the United States, of the domain thus incorporated into the Union; but, having in view the peculiar status created in Hawaii by laws enacted in execution of treaties heretofore concluded between Hawaii and other countries, only such Hawaiian laws are thus provisionally continued as shall not be incompatible with the constitution or the laws of the United States, or with the provisions of this treaty.

It will be noticed that express stipulation is made prohibiting the coming of Chinese laborers from Hawaii to any other part of our national territory. This provision was proper and necessary, in view of the Chinese exodus, and it behooved the negotiators to see to it that this treaty, which in turn is to become in due constitutional course a supreme law of the land, shall not alter or amend existing law in this most important regard.

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary of State, Washington, D. C., June 15, 1897.

MRS. NETTIE CRAVENS

Again on the Stand, but No New Evidence Added.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 19.—Mrs. Nettie Craven, spent another day upon the witness stand yesterday, but in spite of the efforts of her counsel in that direction, she was not permitted to tell the whole story of her relations with the late Senator Fair, the court holding that she could only be cross-examined at this time upon such matters as had been brought out by the plaintiff's attorneys, by whom she had been called as a witness against herself.

Consequently the same straw which had been threshed out time and again since the case came to trial was again gone over without any other apparent result than the wasting of much valuable time.

Mysterious Disappearance of a Woman Who Claimed to Be Barnato's Wife.

CLEVELAND, O., June 19.—Mrs. Blackman, of this city, who claims to be the wife of Barnato, and who left for London about eight weeks ago, has mysteriously disappeared. A letter which was mailed in London about six weeks ago was received by her daughter, who resides in this city. In her letter Mrs. Blackman said she would in a few days set sail for Johannesburg, Africa, to attempt to establish her identity as Barnato's wife. Since that time nothing has been heard from her, and the theory advanced by Detective Seligson is that she has met with foul play.

The party proceeded to visit the Bodelshwingk, a charitable institution, where 1,600 trumplers and a mixed choir of 6,000 voices from all parts of Westphalia performed.

Miss Marlowe has gone to Europe to secure some new plays and will appear under the management of Mr. Frohman next season. This in no wise affects the domestic relations of Mr. and Mrs. Taber. Mr. Taber will stage her plays.

DESPAIR OF REPUBLICANS.

Disappointment and Lack of Courage Showing.

At some risk of being accused of party lukewarmness the Republic deprecates the disposition on the part of many republicans to take a gloomy view of the business situation and to make bitter complaint of the failure of the republican administration to realize the glowing ante-election predictions of prosperity indulged in by advance agents and press agents of the Hanna syndicate.

It is true that the existing situation is not encouraging. The general bank clearances, in sharp contrast with a large gain in St. Louis, indicated a falling off in business last week. Reports from the industrial centers, particularly in Pennsylvania and Ohio, the states most favored by protection, show temporarily, at least, an intensification of business depression resulting in the reduction of wages and production, and in an increase of business failures.

But these results are in great measure caused by special rather than general business conditions. Much of it can be traced to the wholesale tariff tinkering of the republicans in congress. The conditions favorable to business reaction, which the Republic has pointed out, still exist. We have sold an enormous quantity of stuff abroad, and have an easy treasury and a great balance of trade in our favor. Exceptionally fine crops of garden products have been marketed, and the prospect of the grain and cotton crops, except in a few localities, was never better. If the republicans had refrained from business-disturbing legislation these favorable conditions, despite the opposing influence of a bad monetary system, would have resulted in a measure of business relief. The republicans deliberately and in the face of solemn warning took the one step sure to prevent a return to prosperity by yielding to the pressure in favor of tariff legislation for the benefit of the bounty grabbers.

There are truth and justice, therefore, in Mr. Wanmaker's arraignment of the republican party for promising immediate prosperity and then doing nothing to help it along. While the gloomy bitterness expressed by him and echoed by masses of republicans are not fully justified and indicate an unmanly and foolish attitude, yet there is extenuation for the weakness. They are the victims of misrepresentation and deception. They were led to trust in the blossoming rod and the stimulating fetic. To the disappointment following false prophecy is added irritation over continued misrepresentation to cover political deception.

No bitter resentfulness affects the Republic and the rational people who placed no confidence in bombastic campaign predictions and do not believe in fiat prosperity. We suffer neither the disappointment of misplaced faith in the McKinley's rabbit foot nor the humiliation of the false prophet. We are still able to discern the conditions that make for better times and to believe that they will work out a measure of salvation despite the follies and the blunders of the fetich worshippers and the flat prosperity agents. We believe the American people have enough strength, energy and resources to withstand the blight of McKinleyism. We advise our discouraged republican friends to swallow their party disappointment and keep up courage and cheer.—St. Louis Republic.

A Scandalous Scheme.

In the tariff bill as it stands and as it is to be "jammed through" by the senatorial combine there are three principal schedules—wool, hides and sugar. The wool duties will levy a heavy tribute on all the people's clothing and blankets, but they will placate the wool growers of a few states and secure the reelection of the senators who force their adoption. The duty on hides will seriously cripple the export leather industries of the country and add largely to the price the people must pay for boots, shoes and all other leather goods. But this tribute must be levied for the benefit of the cattle trust or the sagebrush senators will withhold their votes and defeat the bill. The sugar duties mean millions to the sugar trust, every dollar of which the consumers of sugar must pay. But the sugar trust owns too many senators—directly or indirectly—to be ignored. Its right to levy tribute must be guaranteed or no tariff bill can be passed. This is the situation. It is scandalous, but it is a fact.—N. Y. World.

Empty Promises.

The merciless advance of McKinley prosperity goes steadily on. Banks close, workmen are thrown out of employment, and times grow harder and harder. The people misled last fall by specious promises are realizing day by day the result of the false movement that put the present administration in power. A great revulsion sets in, and the end is not far to seek. Every succeeding opportunity for expression of public opinion at the polls will produce overwhelming democratic gains. The people, tired of empty promises, will turn from the party that is friendly only to Wall street, to the party that is friendly ever to the people, because it is of, from, and always with them. The only hope for the future of the plain people, whether in national, state, or municipal affairs, is in the return to supremacy of the party of the people, the democracy of the United States.—Tammany Times.

The tariff fight is on in the senate, and troublesome times are ahead. The powers to be protected are squabbling among themselves for the rich rake-off of excessive import taxation, and the republican leaders find it hard to control their clients when it comes to a question of fair division of the hard times grow the country suffers, and McKinley prosperity becomes more and more apparent to the deluded who put the present administration into power.—Tammany Times.

QUEER PROSPERITY.

Disaster Marks the Advent of the Advance Agent.

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch reminds the Globe-Democrat that in its issue of October 10 it declared that "immediately after the election a business boom like that which started with the resumption of gold payments in 1879 will set in." Another leading republican editor said: "The people await the night of November 3 for the wires to send a thrill through the country that will set in motion the millions of men now idle." How were these prophecies and promises fulfilled?

For a few weeks after election, although the wave of prosperity did not appear, employers,

Would that the Alabama legislature follow suit and endeavor to prevent these frequent occurrences of men taking the law into their own hands.

Forty three students had the degree of Bachelor of science conferred upon them at the commencement exercises held at Auburn last Monday. This college is turning out a number of good students every year which are able to compete with the graduates from any college in the South. May its good work continue.

A lawyer in a court room may call a man a liar, scoundrel, villain or a thief and no one makes a complaint when court adjourns. If a newspaper prints such a reflection on a man's character there is a libel suit or a dead editor. This is owing to the fact that the people believe what an editor says; what the lawyer says cuts no figure.—Fourth Estate.

We notice with pleasure that the name of Mr. Paul Hodges, of Florence, is being mentioned for Chancellor of the Northwestern Chancery Division, and we believe no better selection could be made as Mr. Hodges, besides being an accomplished gentleman is a lawyer of note and in every way eminently fitted for this honorable position. We hope he will be elected.

Crop conditions as reported by the weather bureau for the week just past are good. Although there has been too much rain in some sections which greatly retarded the progress of the young crops the general average is fine. It reports an especial improvement in cotton crops above all others. This is truly encouraging news, for should the majority of farmers fail in their crops this year, bankruptcy would be the result.

After long delay and much wrangling the nominating committee of the board of trustees of the University of Alabama met at Birmingham Tuesday, June 15th, and nominated Prof. James K. Powers, of Florence, for president of the University. It is believed his nomination will give general satisfaction throughout the state as he is one of the best known educators in the South. We trust the University will thrive under his able management.

Editor Lane, of The Huntsville Tribune, in a paper read before the Press Association at their meeting in Florence, came out flatly for woman suffrage, and while his argument was good and his reasons plausible, still we do not agree with him. Of course should it work out as he has pictured it no one would dare object, but we believe this impossible. We do not argue that woman by reason of weakness of mind is incapable of voting intelligently, but on the other hand believe she would be more competent than the majority of men; but such is without the sphere of woman. It was never intended by the All Wise Creator that she should lower herself to the level of man and grovel in the contaminating influences of politics, should she be allowed the right of suffrage and become involved in the hot political contests which we so frequently have then she would lose that place in the affections of man which she alone was intended to occupy. She would rob herself of that heavenly influence which she has wielded from time immemorial.

No, we cannot believe as Mr. Lane, that not "until we allow women to vote" for when once man loses that high adoration and love for woman which we truly believe this would greatly effect then, instead of a quiet, peaceable government, we would have one of utter chaos and confusion.

We shall ever labor and use all the influence we are able to bring to bear to prevent such a state of affairs from existing.

A PERTINENT FACT.

From the Talladega News-Reporter.
If you would have a prosperous nation, make it up of small homes, free from incumbrance and where no one man could be the debt slave of another. If you would have an Ireland where misery, pauperism, discontent and degradation run rife and where ambition does not bud, make the masses slaves of the few, as they are today in the United States. We are traveling the same road, only at a far more rapid gait, that brought down the great and ancient Egypt, intellectual Greece, warlike Rome and infidel France. Your histories will tell you that at the downfall of each of these the wealth of the 100 per cent was in the hands of ten per cent or less of the population. And at the rate of the past ten years we need but go another ten until we too have reached that stage. Today two-thirds of the wealth of the nation is in the hands of one-seventieth of the population. Think of it, less than a million people have possession of the property belonging to over sixty millions, and it will not be long at the present rate of increase before they will have it all. What could the people do today if these money kings determined to crown a real king, since they have money enough to go into the militia markets of the world and buy enough powder to carry any point they wish to carry? The only reason it is not done is because they have everything their own way without it. Alas! the millions on millions of debt-burdened people who are slaves to their creditors of a baser sort than those of Ireland today—what can they do other than the will of their masters? And yet how can we hope for relief when the masses sleep on unconscious of their peril and blind to impending danger?

The Troy Standard gives this good advice in speaking of candidates: "If you would not sign his band yourself do not vote for him." This, we repeat, is good advice and would eventually make "the man for the office" instead of—as it now seems—"the office for the man." If we cannot trust a man financially, why then should we trust the reins of office in his hands? True it is that our preference for "the man" may not always coincide with our preference for "the party," in which case the "color line" of the South is an impassable barrier to southern born democracy. Still, when practicable, our own good judgment should lead us where and how to cast our vote for office. This would avoid internal party struggles, it would elevate the party to a deservingly higher standard and above all it would preserve order in the ranks.

Talking on the subject of education, would it not be well at home to know what kind of literature is used by the young people? Wholesome literature can abuse the mind by overdoing, how much more so can bad books and periodicals stagnate not only the intellectuality of youth but then by misguided influence pervert the whole nature to wrong conceptions of life. There is an education going on in the homes at this time through this means not promising to the rising generation for usefulness in its day. The pursuit of money to keep up with the march of fashion and social position by the heads of the household is, we fear, producing sad havoc in the gardens of home education where the young mind must learn its elementary lessons of usefulness if it learns them at all.—Southern Aegis.

The political party of today, being made the means of furthering the ambition of the political aspirants, and satisfying the greed of lusty spoils-men, has become more of a hindrance than an aid to the cause of general prosperity. Men are induced to support parties more in the hope of receiving direct reward if their party wins than of any good that might result to the country for their party's success. The tariff lords, who have grown rich at the expense of the masses, support a republican policy of protection not because it is best for the country, but because it benefits them individually. A political party to help the cause of the people must be founded on true and just principles, and receive its support on the grounds of the correctness of these principles.—Cullman Tribune.

Those who ought to know tell us that there is more western corn being shipped into Alabama now than at any period heretofore. Every train that enters this city brings corn from the west and the largest part of it is sold to the farmers. Along the Tennessee and Coosa rivers, where an abundance of corn can be raised easily, the farmers are having it shipped to them by boat loads. We do not see how the southern farmer ever expects to prosper by such methods. It won't do. Our farmers must raise their own corn.—Gadsden Time-News.

Gov. Johnston, of Alabama, requests the postponement of Alabama Day. Alabama Day was fixed for June 24, but this being confederate Day, and a meeting of several other organizations it was deemed best to postpone the regular day for Alabama in order to bring as many people as possible to the Centennial. Gov. Johnston says that any day from Sept. 23rd to Oct. 7th would be agreeable and that he will do everything possible to make it a great day. A date will soon be fixed by the executive committee.—Nashville American.

The Western Union Telegraph office in Montgomery was destroyed by fire last Saturday. The flames originated during a heavy thunder storm and were supposed to have been created by the wires.

SOMETHING NEW.

From the Montgomery Advertiser.
There's something new and strange continually cropping out among scientific people. Hardly a paper can be picked up that doesn't contain an account of something supposed to be impossible being successfully accomplished, until it really seems that a man must be very bold who will say that anything is beyond the limits of scientific skill.
